Dunn and Berlin Calm as He Charges They Robbed Brewery.

Witness Says Six Engineered Crime

Mais, Legenza Accused; Prosecutor May Call Mrs. Fontaine.

The District Supreme Court bristled with machine guns yesterday when Arthur (Big Dutch) Misunas took the stand as a Government witness in the trial of John (Slim) Dunn and Sam Berlin, alleged members of the Tri-State gang, who are on trial on charges of robbing the Heurich Brewing Co. of $1,600 in October, 1933.

Dunn and Berlin sat placidly while Misunas glared at them from the witness stand and stated time after time they were with him when he engineered the robbery of the brewing company.

Misunas, whose testimony was mainly responsible for the decision of a Richmond jury that ordered Robert Mais and Walter Legenza sent to the electric chair, was accorded a guard that has never been equalled in the District Supreme Court as he "tied up" his two former alleged pals with the robbery.

Courtroom an Arsenal.

Detective sergeants, United States marshals, and department of Justice agents, bearing short machine guns or automatic pistols patrolled the corridors of the courthouse. The doors to the courtroom were closed to spectators, and reporters assigned to cover the trial were searched as they entered.

Justice James M. Proctor ordered that no one should leave the room until the jurors had retired.

2 Counterfeit Suspects Held

Filling Station Employe's Tip Leads to Arrest of Man, Woman.

A Rosslyn, Va., filling station attendant jotted down the license number of the automobile driven by a man who sought to pay for gasoline with a dubious $10 bill, and as a result Secret Service agents and local police yesterday arrested a man and a woman for investigation.

The two arrested said they were George E. Woodin, 24, of the 1800 block of Calvert street northwest, and Edna Hill, 22, of Wilmington, Del. They were taken in a rooming house at Columbia road and Eighteenth street yesterday afternoon, and will be arraigned before a United States commissioner today. Secret Service officials said they intended to place charges of passing counterfeit money.

For the last six months, officials said, $10 counterfeit notes on the Federal Reserve Bank of New York have been circulating in Washington. Not exceptionally well done, they were smudged and the Treasury picture on the back was off center, but the face was deceptive.

From a description given them two weeks ago, Secret Service men thought they knew who was passing the notes, and last Thursday they sent out a lookout for a man in a car with Delaware tags. They found the car, smashed up, and the hunt seemed at a dead end. Friday night, a man in another car was reported passing the notes in Rosslyn. From the number given by a station attendant, the agents traced the car.

Cathcart Case Heroine Asks Divorce Again

LADY VERA HODGE, known to Washingtonians as the Countess of Cathcart.

London, Nov. 26 (AP).—Lady Vera Hodge, the former Countess Cathcart of the "Moral Turpitude" im-predicted that chaos will follow the dismissal Friday of 900 investigators of the alcohol tax unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau after Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat had denied a temporary injunction to restrain the Treasury head from dismissing them.

"Confusion and disorganization are bound to result," he said. "The organization will be completely shot."

While Secretary Morgenthau will confer with aids today regarding whether he may place the 900 on furlough pending remedial action by Congress, it was learned that all of the vacancies may not be filled at once, but that the alcohol tax unit will operate with as small a staff of investigators as possible until the muddle is clarified by further congressional action.

The Civil Service Commission stated that there are ample approved candidates to fill all the vacancies, however, and it is expected that the 240 investigators who successfully passed the recent examination required by the McKellar rider will be reinstated without interruption in service.

It also was explained that the em-

Civil Service Worker Sought For Experiment With Hair Dye

Comptroller General McCarl, yesterday held that the Federal Trade Commission must go to the Civil Service Commission for a woman whose hair is to be used as a laboratory experiment to test a suspected hair preparation, and for another person who is to apply the treatment.

The manufacturer of the preparation is being proceeded against by the trade commission on the allegation that the product offered as a hair tonic is in fact a dye, and acts as a dye. The defense vigorously denies the allegation, maintaining that the fact it changed gray hair to its original color was due, not to dye, but stimulating properties of the preparation.

A test must be made, the commission explained yesterday. A subject expressed herself as willing to have her hair treated, and then cut and delivered to the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils of the Agriculture Department for analysis, all for the sum of $25.

A similar amount is desired to purchase a bottle of the preparation, and to compensate the person who will apply it. The trade commission could not decide what fund this would be chargeable against.

Solving the problem, the Comptroller General ordered the appointments to be made through the Civil Service Commission, with the expenses charged against the regular appropriation.

What employment register the experimenting pair will come under last night was puzzling the Civil Service Commission.

Slain Woman Linked With 3 Dead Girls

Bus Driver Identifies Her as Children's Companion.

Family Tragedy Theory Is Strengthened by Development.

Carlisle, Pa., Nov. 26 (AP).—A woman found shot to death near Duncansville was identified today by Paul White, a bus driver, as the erstwhile companion of three little girls found huddled in death on a mountainside near here.

White went to the Duncansville morgue after identifying the children as having been among his passengers on a trip from New York to Harrisburg last Wednesday, and after viewing the woman's body said:

Duncansville is about 100 miles from here.

The children's bodies were found under a blanket Saturday, while that of the woman was discovered in a railroad shack on the same day. With her was the body of an unidentified man. Police said he apparently had shot the woman through the head with a rifle and then had taken his own life.

Other Clews.

The cause of the children's death remained obscure.

Other clews, State police here said, strengthened the theory that the five deaths resulted from a "family tragedy."

These included:

A woman told Philadelphia police that she recognized the dead girls through pictures as the "same ones I saw in the restaurant" in North Philadelphia on Sunday night, November 18. A man and a woman accompanied them and one of the girls told her they were from California.

Boston police said Earl Sylvester, bus driver, reported carrying a woman and three girls to New York on Wednesday. He said the woman was about 30 and wore a black coat and that one of the children was a blonde and wore a white dots. This corre- one of the police pointed

Post, Winnie Mae Seek Altitude Mark

Bartlesville, Okla., Scene of Stratosphere Flight.

Bartlesville, Okla., Nov. 26 (AP).—Wiley Post and his globe-circling plane, the Winnie Mae, were ready tonight for a thrust into the stratosphere tomorrow, confident the airplane altitude record will come down with them.

Post will wear a specially made suit, similar to that of a deep sea diver. His plane is equipped with a special supercharger, convertible pitch propeller and other equipment designed by Post to give it a theoretical ceiling of about 75,000 feet.

The present altitude record for heavier-than-air machines is 47,352.2 feet, set by Lieut. Renato Donati, of Italy.

Blow on Head Fatal to Wells, Autopsy Finds

After a second autopsy yesterday on the body of Bennett A. Wells, 28, unemployed clerk of Capitol Heights, Md., which revealed that he "died from a blow on the head," Mayor Thomas J. Luckett and the town council of Capitol Heights, in special session last night, passed an ordinance establishing a closing hour of 1 a. m. for all places selling or dispensing liquor, or where liquor is consumed.

Leaders of the town, 100 strong, jammed their way into the town's firehouse for the meeting last night, while several hundred curious peered through the windows.

The new ordinance, and most of the discussion, were aimed at ending the numerous week-end brawls which have marred the Maryland suburb's peace. Many of the speakers denounced Washingtonians who drive to Capitol Heights to "drink and fight."

Mate Shoots Bride, Priest In N.Y. Hotel

Drinking Party Precedes Slayings, Terminating Honeymoon.

17-Year-Old Actress Is Victim of Husband's Bullets.

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—A man identified as a New Jersey priest and a honeymooning bride from Hollywood were shot to death today in the cleric's hotel room by the woman's husband, a former Bible school student.

All had been drinking heavily, Assistant District Attorney Saul Price said.

The slain man, Price said, was the Rev. Joseph J. Leonard, a priest at the Morris Hall Home for the Aged at Lawrenceville, N. J.

The bride was the former Ruth Tiles, 17. She had sought a career in the movies under the name of Ruth Mary Armstrong.

Her husband, Joseph L. Steinmetz, 22, was found beside the bodies, collapsed. Price said he orally admitted the slayings. He will be arraigned tomorrow on a charge of homicide.

Husband's Confession.

The district attorney's aid said Steinmetz told him:

"The priest asked my wife down to his room to hear a confession * * * I followed them * * * my mind was in a whirl * * * and I shot them."

Steinmetz came to the United States in 1929 from Bucharest with his mother, who lives in Brooklyn. He met Miss Armstrong on the West Coast while he was studying for the ministry at the Bible Institute in Los Angeles.

They were married November 10 in Tia Juana and came to New York several days ago on their honeymoon.

The double slaying was not made public until several hours after the shooting.

Price, who assumed charge of the case, announced these details:

"Steinmetz and his wife registered in New York at the Knights of Columbus Hotel. Either last Friday or Saturday, Steinmetz met the priest in the lobby. They spoke to each other and conversed on several occasions thereafter.

Had Drinks Together.

"Today, when Mr. and Mrs. Steinmetz went down to breakfast they met the priest and asked him up to their room. They had several drinks and talked for a couple of hours.

"The Rev. Mr. Leonard asked Steinmetz and his wife to lunch with him. Around noon, they went to a restaurant near the hotel, where they had several drinks, ending with a tomato juice cocktail. Then, they returned to the Steinmetz room. The priest went out and returned with a bottle of liquor and all drank some more.

"Steinmetz had purchased a pistol in Arizona as they were driving East. He showed this to the priest.

Gov.-Elect Nice Urges Ritchie Regime Probe

Outgoing Governor Opens Own Inquiry on Shortage of Funds in State Roads Department as Successor Vacations.

Baltimore, Nov. 26 (AP).—The State's finances moved into the spotlight today as the outgoing administration sought to learn the cause of shortage of funds in the State roads department to meet obligations and the incoming administration prepared to make an extensive "audit of the whole 15-year Ritchie regime."

Gov.-elect Harry W. Nice, according to a special dispatch to the Evening Sun from Miami, where he is vacationing, indicated the probe which he plans is to investigate all State departments. The paper said such an investigation "would take more than a year and cost approximately a quarter of a million dollars."

Gov. Ritchie, who retires from office on January 9, has W. A. Codd, auditor of the State Roads Commission, at work bringing all the figures of the department up to date. The Governor said it will be impossible to get a true picture of this situation until all the rough figures at hand now are made more accurate.

Gov. Ritchie four days ago placed the indebtedness of the commission at $580,000, but said it could be paid by December 15. He had added Howard Bruce, a former member of the commission, to the list of State officials conducting his inquiry into the overexpenditures.

In reporting Nice's audit probe, the Evening Sun said:

"He feels, he said, that his election was a mandate from the people for a probe of that extent, and whatever it costs will be money well spent. On those grounds he will demand that the Legislature empower him to proceed with the audit of the Ritchie administration's finances, he asserted.

The Governor-elect's statement was brought about by an inquiry as to what he proposed to do about the situation existing in the State roads commission.

"He said he did not intend to take any part at this time in the inquiry as to the reasons for a temporary shortage of funds in the commission caused by $580,000 in overdrafts made in anticipation of the future gas-tax revenues."

The paper quoted Nice directly as follows:

"In view of the fact that I do not

2 in Revenue Bureau Accused in Conspiracy For Evasion of Taxes

Two Facing Indictments as Broad Investigation Is Planned.

Tip-Off to Suspects Foils Frame-up

Men Able to Influence Decisions Dropped as Victim Bares Deal.

Indictment of two Internal Revenue Bureau employes, one of them an official, and a broad investigation by the Treasury Department to determine whether previous attempts have been made to influence decisions loomed yesterday following the disclosure that the two bureau employes have been dropped.

Two New York tax consultants and two revenue agents working in the New York area are also understood to be involved in the conspiracy which was uncovered by an unidentified person whom Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau described as "a patriotic business man."

Whether the Federal Government or only taxpayers have been defrauded by the combination of Government employes and tax consultants has not been determined definitely, it was said at the Treasury Department, although Internal Revenue Bureau investigators stated that only the taxpayer has been mulcted.

"There is nothing worse than for a Government employe to sell out his Government," Secretary Morgenthau commented. The penalty can not be too severe for him."

Frame-Up Fails.

Secretary Morgenthau explained that the "patriotic business man" had been approached by a stranger who offered to get "his case squashed" for a 20 per cent commission.

The business man got in touch with the Treasury Department and explained the incident while emphasizing that he was not seeking sympathy for his own case but that he thought the Secretary of the Treasury should know what was going on.

"I was deeply shocked," Morgenthau said, "but I told him to go through with it."

Before the frame-up had been carried through successfully, however, the persons involved were tipped off. The Treasury Secretary, nevertheless, first suspended and then dismissed the Internal Revenue Bureau employes, one an official and the other an auditor. Dismissal of the two revenue agents is expected shortly.

Probe All Cases.

Secretary Morgenthau also revealed yesterday that attorneys for "Dutch" Schultz, former New York beer racketeer, have approached the Treasury to settle income tax charges but that the Treasury refuses "to settle gangster cases."

Asked what the Government has on Schultz, the Secretary said "plenty." Schultz's lawyers promised to produce him if the Treasury would settle the case, Morgenthau said.

"He is the last of five or six important gangsters mixed up with

Mrs. Vanderbilt Here to Rest; Bitter Against Gloria's Nurse

Mother States She Will Not Jeopardize Chance of Regaining Child by Taking Her From Aunt on Week-ends.

(Associated Press.)

Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt slipped quietly into a hotel suite here last night, bent on a rest which she said she "badly needed."

But before going into seclusion she took time to answer questions of a few waiting reporters, and to discuss the nurse for her child, Gloria.

"I would give everything I hold dear to have that woman out of my child's environment," said Mrs. Vanderbilt with deep emphasis.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, tall, dark-haired, dark-eyed, pale faced, black gowned, sat on a divan and quietly answered questions put to her.

Her only ornament was a large jade green ring, contrasting with fingernails enameled a brilliant red.

She said she was not going to jeopardize her chance to regain complete possession of her child by accepting the ruling of Supreme Court Justice Carewe that Gloria might come to her on week-ends and holidays.

She said she would continue her fight for Gloria until she won.

Asked if she had ever before been separated from the child at Christmas, she answered, "Never."

She said she had received thousands of letters of sympathy—"and I want to thank everybody for them, too."

A stack of these letters were waiting for her when she arrived at the Mayflower Hotel, even though she had made every effort to keep her presence here unknown. Several asked to speak with her for just a few minutes to express sympathy.

Asked if she had read various symposiums on the case in which opinion was brought out that a

Leaders Drop Plan to Boost Taxes in 1935

Rep. Hill Convinced Way to Balance Budget Is Revenue Increase.

By Robert C. Albright.

Plans for a 1935 tax bill to finance emergency expenditures and ordinary Federal outlays yesterday were quietly shelved, for the time being, by Democratic leaders in House and Senate.

Flat opposition to an increase in tax rates while business is struggling to get on its feet, was announced by Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, chairman of the special House Ways and Means sub-committee studying the revenue structure.

"We balanced the budget on paper in 1932, but when we looked for the revenue, it just wasn't there," said Chairman Hill.

"I am convinced the only way to balance the budget is by improving and increasing the sources of revenue. Tax rates are high enough right now, in my opinion. If we step them up, we would only retard recovery."

Coming on the eve of a preliminary meeting of the tax sub-committee on Monday, the Hill statement was broadly significant. It

Peru Revolt Fails; 203 Seized in Plot

Rebels Are Surprised by Loyal Troops.

Lima, Peru, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—A widespread revolutionary plot has been broken by the government, it was announced tonight. Loyal troops arrested 203 plotters.

About 300 armed revolutionaries gathered in darkness early today, it was revealed, and were preparing to assault the arsenal and the barracks guarding the presidential palace when they were surprised by government forces. A general attack on government centers had been planned for dawn. All the chief plotters were captured, government spokesmen said.

Additional outbreaks were quelled in Huancayo and Ayacucho. Several persons were wounded.

Japan Fearful Of Exclusion In Navy Plans

Wants Consideration in Any Move Despite Plan to Junk Treaty.

London, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—Japan, worried by word that the United States and Great Britain are seeking common action procedure after Tokyo renounces the Washington Treaty, today came forward with an appeal for triparty action which would include her.

Ambassador Tsuneo Matsudaira, appealing to Norman H. Davis, chairman of the United States delegation to the waning preliminary naval parleys here, said Tokyo hoped to be included in any subsequent naval procedure action. However, abrogation of the Washington Treaty is inevitable.

In fact, the conversations with Davis evidently were conducted on the assumption that Japan merely is waiting for a favorable moment to denounce the pact of 1922, establishing the 5-5-3 naval ratio among Great Britain, the United States and Japan, with Japan on the "3-end."

The meeting also seemed to bring out more definitely than ever that the present conferences will fail to reach any agreement, hence the delegates are turning their attention to the obscure outlook after the pact is denounced.

Matsudaira assured Davis that the Japanese delegation had made nothing like a revised 5-4-4 naval ratio proposition to the British, despite reports, with Japan and the United States to have equal naval

Glass Convicted Of Trying to Kill His Fifth Wife

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.). A jury tonight found Isaiah Glass, 45, guilty of assault with intent to kill his fifth wife, Leah, whom he was charged with attacking with a hammer last June. The woman's skull was fractured and she was near death for a week.

The wife testified she did not know how she received the injuries. Glass will be sentenced later.

President's Remodeled Office Paragon of Dignity and Taste

It would be practically lost if picked up and set down in Jim Farley's inner sanctum (or reception hall, for that matter), but the new private office, which President Roosevelt will see for the first time when he returns to Washington next month, is mighty nearly a paragon of dignity, efficiency and good taste.

That's one impression derived from an inspection tour, personally conducted by Lieut. Edwin P. Lock, jr., yesterday for a Post reporter.

Except for the lighting fixtures, the furnishings of the President's office will be practically the same ones he used before the $325,000 job of altering and remodeling the business wing of the White House was begun last summer.

Yesterday the chamber was undergoing finishing touches. Telephones were being installed and furniture transferred from the temporarily set-up office in the mansion. A ship model, one of several which the President displays, lay on the floor.

Though entirely rebuilt and redesigned, his office is still oval shaped. It is slightly larger than its predecessor and, like all of the other rooms, has indirect lighting. Like the others, too, its walls are a grayish-green.

Lieut. Lock, who is on regular detail at the White House from the Army Engineers' Office, emphasized the indirect lighting and gray-green wall motif.

"Easiest on the eyes," he explained.

Eleven Brazilian naval planes made ready to leave tomorrow for Ladero, in the region of the Paraguay River, to "safeguard Brazil's neutrality" in the Chaco area.

Wilson Memorial Slab Is Restored to League

Geneva, Nov. 26 (AP).—The strange case of the week-end disappearance of the Woodrow Wilson memorial slab was solved today by the gang which spirited it away from the street wall of the League of Nations Palace.

The gang was composed of workmen assigned to refurbish 14 letters worn away by the weather. It was suggested that the memorial to the father of the league may be placed inside the new League Palace.

Business Calls On Roosevelt Anew for Aims

New Plea Made as Statistics Show October Exports at Peak Since 1931.

Statistical indications of improving business were joined yesterday by a new call upon President Roosevelt to issue a statement of New Deal objectives in furtherance of the move for effective cooperation between business leaders and the Administration.

C. L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, issued a statement asserting that business "must have more definite ideas as to the direction in which the Government is headed." The Government, he said, "must project a course that can actually be followed."

From the Commerce Department meanwhile came a report that American export business for October reached its highest total since April, 1931. The figure was $206,352,000, compared with imports of $129,629,000, producing a $76,723,000 balance of trade in favor of the United States.

Sloan Calls for Spirit.

A prominent figure in the manufacturing world, George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton-Textile Institute, speaking at Nashville, called for a concentration upon stirring up activity in the consumer goods industries, as a means of improving the situation in the durable goods field, which he termed the key to recovery.

At the same time, Senator La Follette expressed in New Orleans an opinion that a continuation of relief appropriations will be essential "until the Nation is able to recover its economic health under its own strength."

Bardo's statement, issued in New York, recalled the action of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in asking President Roosevelt to answer a six-point questionnaire covering his policies for the future. The Chief Executive made no reply.

"Confidence Most Important."

"The President's recent assurance that the Administration is not hostile to such fundamentals of American economy as private initiative and the profit motive is heartening," he said. "Confidence is the most important factor in any effort to chart the future trend of American business.

"If busines is to get on its feet it must have more definite ideas as to the direction in which our Government is heading. Our welfare, not only for the immediate future, but for years to come, wil depend upon the clearness with which these principles are set forth by the Administration in Washington. The Government must project a course that can actually be followed."

Bardo's appeal was made with the stated purpose of providing a basis for an adequately planned cooperation, to be developed at a "congress of American industry," scheduled for December 5 in New York, under the auspices of his organization. The meeting, to be attended by prominent industrialists, is directed at the formulation of "a platform for American industry."

Chamber Keeps Silent.

The chamber's similar request was made in September, well before the current effort at cooperation between business and Administration was initiated. Although its view that such a statement from the Chief Executive would be of great value has not changed, the chamber has said nothing about it since the original request was made.

The Commerce Department's foreign trade figures followed a series of other more optimistic reports covering the entire field of commerce and industry, published by the same department, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Federal Reserve Board.

The statistics showed that for the first ten months of the year exports totaled $1,767,697,000, compared with $1,298,099,000 in 1933. Imports for the same period this year aggregated $1,371,871,000, and last year, $1,187,500,000. For the ten months of 1934, the favorable trade balance was $395,826,000.

Authoritative quarters revealed coincidently that the Administration is planning to begin soon the negotiation of a resiprocal trade treaty with Argentina, under the act permitting the President to reduce tariffs by as much as 50 per cent in return for similar concessions from other countries.

Such treaties with Brazil and Colombia are expected to be announced before long, followed by the negotiation of trade pacts with smaller South and Central American nations in addition to Argentina.

Wheat Regulation Accord Reached

European Nations, Including Russia, in Agreement.

Budapest, Hungary, Nov. 26 (AP).—The sixth international wheat conference officially announced tonight that both the exporting and importing countries of Europe, including Russia, were "in general agreement" on new proposals under consideration for regulation of the wheat trade.

The conference completed its discussion of all proposals on the agenda, including schemes for both annual and quarterly export quotas and for a quota reserve, after which it was officially stated that several countries had suggested "minor alterations."

Meanwhile, the deadlock caused by Argentina's refusal to accept the 1933 wheat pact as a basis for reducing acreage in the "big four" countries—the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia—continued.

Detroit Builder Dies.

Detroit, Nov. 26 (AP).—Charles O. A. Brunk, 71, prominent builder and for 16 years a member of the Missouri Legislature, died here today after five weeks' illness. Brunk built the Moolah Shrine Temple in St. Louis.

Between You and Me

Ickes and Moffett Accused of Dodging Row by Blaming Differences on Press.

By Raymond Clapper

HAROLD L. ICKES, Secretary of Interior and administrator of PWA, and James A. Moffett, Federal housing administrator, are able, two-fisted gentlemen, competent of taking care of themselves in a scrap.

Therefore, it was disillusioning to find them, when they were caught in a jam last week, running out by taking the ancient outspoken way of blaming it on the press.

It is no disgrace when two able men have a difference of opinion. That is bound to happen frequently in the course of human events. If, as in this case, they are lieutenants in the Administration, they can argue it out with the President and let the better man win. That is what you would expect of two such straightforward and confident gentlemen as Ickes and Moffett.

But instead they issue a joint statement, denying in the face of their public remarks, that there is any conflict of opinion between them. Not content with that, they say twice in their statement, at the beginning and the end, that there is a disposition in "certain quarter"—the press, of course—to stir up trouble and make it appear there is a divergence of views between them.

Many readers depend upon this daily journal for their morning enlightenment. In other cities many readers depend upon the reports of the Associated Press as they appear in their respective newspapers. They are entitled to have the correct facts. They properly should resent any attempt by the newspapers to misrepresent the fact, to stir up trouble by poisoned news reporting, or to make it appear that Ickes and Moffett are not in agreement if those two gentlemen are cooing like doves.

The fact is that the newspapers were not "stirring up trouble," The two gentlemen themselves stirred it up and then it bit them.

Last Thursday afternoon Mr. Ickes told the press he favored a Government small-home-building program with no down payment and 3 per cent interest charge. He added: "We all would be delighted to have private industry take on a large building program, but we can not sit and wait indefinitely."

Asked whether this would not constitute unfair competition with private industry, Mr. Ickes said: "I think the question is the same as in the power field. If private industry charges rates that are too high, socially speaking, why should not we compete with it?"

The next day Mr. Moffett held a press conference and was asked whether a program of the type outlined by Mr. Ickes would impair the work of his agency. He replied:

"Most decidedly so. Furthermore it would knock the packing out of the existing real estate structure in this country."

And the next day—some suspect after Warm Springs had been on the telephone—Ickes and Moffett went to the White House and with perfectly straight faces, gave out the following: "We suspect that there is a disposition in certain quarters to make it appear that there is a difference of opinion between us. We decline to furnish the material for a Roman holiday for those who are trying to create this impression."

That is a noble resolve, even if two days late.

Incidentally, in that same statement, Ickes and Moffett said that this "was the firs occasion we had had to sit down together and discuss the jurisdiction of our respective administrations."

That's coordination, even if six months late.

* * * *

In addition to the housing conflict, there is the divergence of policy between Secretary Hull and George N. Peek over foreign trade. Hull advocates a most-favored nation clause in all reciprocal trade agreements—a one-price-to-all policy. Peek wants to make individual bargaining agreements, following the old blind price-haggle-with-the-customer practice.

Then you have the conflict between Donald R. Richberg and the Labor Relations Board over interpretation of section 7a and the controversy as to whether old-age pensions shall be pushed now or some other time.

President Roosevelt is hauling his advisers down to Warm Springs one by one, and he may be able to iron out the divergences. But at the moment the picture is best described by a former New Dealer who has departed to outer darkness. He says it is "Organized Chaos."

The Department of Justice has encountered difficulty in assembling proof for prosecution of the Houde labor case. For one thing it hasn't obtained the missing minutes of the bargaining negotiations between the Houde company and its employes.

The department might get the transcript from the National Labor Relations Board, which heard the evidence originally, except that when the stenographic report of the factory wage negotiations was offered during the labor board hearings, the board did not take it.

The minutes were taken down by stenographers employed by the Houde corporation, and now that it is facing the courts it refuses to give them up.

NRA looked for a trained man to become deputy administrator in charge of the newsprint code, and finally found one, William J. Brown. He was trained in a veterinary college, and practiced for eight years.

Liberals once held a halo over the brow of Newton D. Baker, Wilson Secretary of War. Now he is in the doghouse because he has hired out to the Edison Electric Institute to contest the constitutionality of TWA. His associate in this is James M. Beck, Pennsylvania Republican, who retired recently from Congress voluntarily because he said he could no longer be a rubber stamp.

Baker and Beck have prepared a joint opinion to the effect that TVA is "palpably unconstitutional."

When Baker was Secretary of War he helped draft the Federal water power act, which extended Federal authority over water power. Later he became attorney for the Appalachian Power Co. and challenged the constitutionality of that act. Also, while he was Secretary of War, he had much to do with pushing the Muscle Shoals power project, which eventually became the cornerstone of the TVA program. Now he is going after that. Baker also had a large hand in the World War, but up to now that is still constitutional.

Congressional Leaders Drop Plan to Boost Taxes in 1935

struck a note of accord with pleas of business leaders, and views already expressed by Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson and Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee.

Representative Hill last session directed the House study that led to a general plugging of tax loopholes. He took the position yesterday that the present tax structure already is sufficiently sturdy to offset Government spending, if and when business activity returns to normal.

Cites Rise in Revenues.

He pointed to the $300,000,000 increase in revenues already registered for the first months of this fiscal year, over and above the same period last year, and the $72,000,000 favorable balance in excess of ordinary expenditures.

"We are not in as bad shape as people generally believe," he said. "The pick-up in collections indicates to my mind that revenue sources are improving. Right now I would like to concentrate on continuing this gain. When commercial activity returns to the proper level, we will not need to search much further."

Apparently the Administration is planning to lay no program of its own before the tax sub-committee when it meets next Monday. Although the Treasury has a dozen tax plans under consideration, Secretary Morgenthau indicated yesterday no recommendations will be made pending the President's message to Congress. Conforming with normal procedure, the Treasury then will place its proposals before the House Ways and Means Committee.

Sales Tax Proposals Due.

Individual Republicans, including Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking member of the committee, and Representative Frank Crowther, of New York, have sales tax proposals they will offer partially in lieu of existing nuisance and processing levies. Crowther will urge that Congress at once enter on a five-year program for balancing the budget.

Chairman Hill made clear that his subcommittee does not intend to limit its study, regardless of the present tax outlook.

"We will look over the whole field," he said, "and if we see where we can tighten a wire here and there, we will attend to it.

$420,000,000 Loss Seen.

"Whether we can do without any of the $420,000,000 in levies expiring in the next half-year is a thing we will consider, too. But it seems to me that $420,000,000 would be quite a chunk to lose at this time.

"We haven't really realized as yet the full benefit of the tightening up in administrative phases of the law we brought about last session. That alone should result in greatly increased collections.

"Right now the country as a whole is trying to get out of a hole, and I can not for the life of me see where any new weights in the form of increased taxes would help us out."

Special excise taxes expiring by July 31, that will come within the subcommittee's purview, include levies on admissions, gasoline, conveyances, lubricating oil, grape concentrate, matches, electrical energy, tires and tubes, toilet preparations, furs, jewelry, auto trucks, automobiles and motorcycles, auto parts, radio sets, phonographs, mechanical refrigerators, firearms, cartridges, chewing gum, piping of oil, and telegraph, telephone and cable messages. Excises on candy and soft drinks already have gone off the books.

Reduction in liquor taxes, as a curb against bootlegging, has been urged by Chairman Joseph Choate of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, but Secretary Morgenthau is reported to have other ideas.

2d Tumor Treatment Faced by Dionne Girl

Callander, Ontario, Nov. 26 (AP).—Within a few months, but perhaps not before spring, it will be necessary to apply a second radium treatment to the naevus type of tumor on the thigh of little Marie, smallest of the Dionne quintuplets.

Dr. A. R. Dafoe said today growth of the naevus had been checked by the first treatment administered last summer by Dr. Howard A. Keeley, specialist of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, but he thought another treatment would be required to clear up the growth.

U. S. Will Keep Within Income, Says Robinson

Senate Leader, Harrison Talk Over Budget With Roosevelt.

(Post Staff Writer).

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 26.—President Roosevelt expects Congress to continue all existing tax measures, to balance the budget of so-called "normal" expenditures, and to enact a "reasonably conservative" relief program, it was disclosed here today.

This was the upshot of a four-hour talk the President had with Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson and Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, who came here for a preview of the Administration's 1935 legislative program.

"It is believed," Senator Robinson declared, "that expenditures for what is termed 'normal' Government purposes will be kept well within the income. But it is not yet possible to decide what further arrangements are necessary respecting employment and relief."

Not As Great As Forecast.

While thus declining to estimate the extent the entire budget may be unbalanced again as a result of "emergency" requirements, the Arkansan said, inferentially, that it would not be as great as had been reported. When various sums, up to $12,000,000,000, were mentioned, he shook his head and replied:

"On the whole, it will be a reasonably conservative program."

The Senators were closeted with the President at the "Little White House" most of the afternoon. All three went thoroughly into new legislation Congress will be asked to enact at the coming session and to the danger—from the Administration viewpoint—of such other measures as the bonus.

Further Talk Set Today.

At the conclusion of the conference, Senator Harrison sped for a train to Washington, while Senator Robinson rested at the Warm Springs Foundation, disclosing that he will have a further talk with Mr. Roosevelt in the morning.

"Taxes now being levied will probably have to be extended another year," the Senate leader said, adding "I do not anticipate that an effort will be made to make substantial increases in existing taxes, or to impose substantial new taxes."

Senator Robinson explained that he was referring to the so-called "nuisance" levies, such as the taxes on bank checks and utility gross receipts. The taxes in this group, which bring into the Treasury approximately $400,000,000, expire during the coming year if not continued.

Not to Revive Gas Tax.

The Senator's statement likewise covers taxes on liquor and wines, he said, thus indicating that the administration has turned away from thoughts of lowering these levies as a means of discouraging bootlegging. The 1-cent gas tax already has expired, however, and the Senator said there is no present intention of reviving it.

"The bonus was not discussed in any detail," Senator Robinson went on. "There was mention of the subject, but no conclusions were reached. There was nothing to indicate any plans for financing the bonus, nor do I know of any plans that are incontemplation."

This comment was regarded as significant in view of reports current here yesterday that the President feels Congress should adopt measures to pay for the $2,000,000,000 bonus if it insists on passing it. It was apparent that Administration opposition to payment of the bonus would be marshaled along this line.

Bonus Outcome Uncertain.

Earlier in the day Senator Harrison, while conceding that sentiment for immediate payment of the adjusted service certificates is formidable, expressed belief that the Senate would not pass it over a veto by the President. Senator Robinson preferred not to predict the outcome.

Regarding the budget, the Senate leader said there was no way to escape another increase in the deficit because "people can't be permitted to starve." He was asked: "Do you think this country can look to a tapering off of the deficit?"

"Yes, I do," he answered, thoughtfully, and then amended, "but the wish may be father to the thought."

The size of the 1936 budget deficit will be dependent almost entirely on the relief program, it was made clear. While he declined to mention any specific figures, the Senator's remarks were taken to bear out earlier forecasts in The Washington Post of a budget for next year about the same size as this year's.

President Meets Them.

President Roosevelt drove down to the Foundation this morning to pick up the two Senators. Senator Robinson, accompanied by Mrs. Robinson, motored here from their home at Little Rock, Ark. Senator Harrison came from Mississippi, en route to Washington.

"How do you like the Sunny South?" the President asked them as they bundled into his small open car, shivering in overcoats.

The Senators visited the Warm Springs pool, where Mr. Roosevelt engaged in his customary water polo games, and then were guests for luncheon at the Little White House. Also present were Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Robinson and Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell, who, however, did not take part in the conference that followed.

Another caller was Rudolf S. Hecht, new president of the American Bankers Association, who referred to the President's expressed wish for an "all-American team" of bankers, industrialists, labor, etc., with the statement: "I think he's gotten some fine new recruits for that team. And I think there is good teamwork going on right now. I told the President I didn't think it would be long before he made a touchdown and kicked a goal.

"But, seriously, I think there is a better spirit of cooperation between Government and business than we have had in a long time. And I think that even the pessimists have to admit that business is looking up. Comparisons in nearly all lines show improvement. My statement is based on facts."

Blue Eagle's 'Gag' Now Is Removed, Harriman Holds

Take it from W. Averell Harriman new NRA director of information, there will be no "gagging" of Blue Eagle officials in the future.

"My purpose is to clear up mysteries," he told newspapermen yesterday at the first of his daily press conferences.

Harriman demonstrated his sincerity by explaining the status of several codes about which there had been uncertainty. He also informed reporters the staff of deputy administrators had been instructed to answer all questions of fact.

'Cease Firing' Order Silences Ickes, Moffett

FHA Head to See President at Warm Springs for Discussion of Plans.

Both Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes and Federal Housing Administrator James A. Moffett yesterday rigidly observed "cease firing" orders in the controversy over the part the Federal Government should play in stimulating home building and speculation turned toward a visit Mr. Moffett will pay to President Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Ga., later this week.

The housing administrator is one of the trustees of the Warm Springs Foundation and it is customary for the trustees to gather there for a meeting and dinner with President Roosevelt and the health resort's patients each Thanksgiving Day.

It is assumed here that the President will discuss the housing situation with Mr. Moffett when the latter appears for the dinner. It was reported yesterday that the President already has indicated to Secretary Ickes and Mr. Moffett his displeasure over the public airing which they gave their respective viewpoints last week.

May Abandon PWA Projects.

Since then the two men met at the White House and sponsored a joint statement disclaiming there was any differences between them. But they withdrew nothing said by them at their respective press conferences on Thursday and Friday.

The feeling exists in some quarters that as a result of that head-on clash of the two officials, plans for a huge low-cost housing program to be financed out of PWA funds will be abandoned. But this is not certain. Yet it gives rise to speculation as to what direction the Roosevelt Administration might turn to stimulate employment with public works projects.

Would Speed Employment.

The difficulty found with most PWA projects is the length of time necessary to get them under way. The low-cost housing program was regarded as a plan that could be put into operation with a minimum of delay and the prospect of giving employment to skilled artisans and to workers in the capital goods industries.

If the housing program on a huge scale is abandoned and it is decided to continue to use PWA projects as a pump primer for industry, greater emphasis may have to be placed on grade crossing elimination, rural electrification or highway construction.

Bids for $2,700,000 PWA Project in Atlanta

Bids for the first Federal low-cost housing project, the $2,700,000 Techwood in Atlanta, were asked yesterday by Secretary Ickes, the public works administrator, the Associated Press reported.

Replacing 13 blocks of slum area, Techwood will house 603 families in apartments and row-houses and 318 students in a dormitory. The project is in the area adjacent to Georgia Tech and will replace an objectionable section of inferior housing which has been the source of civic dissatisfaction.

Approximately 37 projects in 30 localities are embraced by PWA's national $150,000,000 slum-clearance and low-cost housing program, and Ickes said several other projects will be ready for bidding on construction in a short time.

Oil Men Appeal In Code Fight

Call Constitutional Rights Lost Through Pact and NRA.

Contending an emergency does not create the power to deprive a citizen of his constitutional rights, two oil producers yesterday asked the Supreme Court to declare invalid the oil code and a part of the national industrial recovery act, according to the Associated Press.

The brief, filed by the Panama Refining Co. and A. F. Anding, an individual producer, was a forerunner of the fight to be staged in the high court December 10 by producers in the east Texas oil fields.

The contention put forward yesterday was that an emergency, such as Congress declared to exist, would not create power whereby Congress and the President could "dictate to the citizens of a State how much petroleum they can produce during any period, and the minimum wage they shall pay their employes while producing it."

It was proposed, the brief added, to prosecute criminally those who violated orders of the President to carry out the oil code.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held, the brief stated, that an emergency does not create power and that even during a state of war Congress and the President can not pass the limitations placed on them by the Constitution nor deprive a citizen of constitutional rights.

$500,000,000 May Be Sought By Morgenthau

$300,000,000 Issue by HOLC Not to Be Called Now.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau yesterday ended two uncertainties in regard to his department's forthcoming financial operation, although he declined to reveal details of how much new money the Government would require on December 15.

Mr. Morgenthau announced that $300,000,000 of 4 per cent Home Owners Loan Corporation bonds would not be called at this time and that the Treasury would not make public in connection with the December offering any conversion plan for the $1,800,000,000 of called 4¼ per cent Liberty Loan bonds. The latter were called last month as of April 15 next.

Although the two announcements were in the negative, they were regarded as simplifying the picture of what the Treasury proposes to do at this time. The Treasury has maturing on December 15 a total of $992,496,500 in one-year 2¼ per cent certificates and that sum will have to be refunded.

Borrowing Predicted.

The fact that the Treasury has decided not to attempt a conversion of the 4 per cent HOLC bonds into 3 per cent securities at this time was taken as an indication that it plans to borrow a sizable sum of new money for Government operations, perhaps $300,000,000, or as much as $500,000,000.

If this surmise is correct, then it means that for several more months at least the Treasury will have no need to utilize its so-called gold profit or the silver seigniorage. Utilization of these funds to pay the running cost of the Government would be considered as inflationary steps.

In August Secretary Morgenthau explained the gold profit fund, including the $2,000,000,000 allocated to the stabilization fund, would be used eventually to reduce the Government's debt, but that for the present the sum would be kept locked up and untouched. Apparently that statement still stands because otherwise the Treasury would not forego the opportunity of refunding the HOLC bonds into securities with a lower interest rate.

The HOLC 4 per cent bonds were the first issued by that agency. At that time only the interest of these bonds was guaranteed by the Treasury. Subsequently Congress passed legislation giving a Treasury guarantee to both the interest and principle of all HOLC bonds subsequently issued.

Issue by HOLC.

The HOLC thereafter issued bonds at interest rates of 3 and 2¾ per cent. The agency offered to give guaranteed 3 per cent bonds in exchange for the partially guaranteed 4 per cent securities. Holders of about $300,000,000 of the old bonds took advantage of the offer, but there remains outstanding $300,000,000 of the old bonds.

Refunding of these bonds into securities with a 3 per cent interest rate would mean an annual saving of $3,000,000 for the HOLC and that agency is anxious to have the refunding operation take place as soon as possible. These bonds are callable as of January 1 and not again until next July.

The announcement that no conversion plan was ready for the called 4¼ per cent Liberties was not held significant, since the Treasury may reveal its plans in that respect at any time between now and next April 1.

With the Treasury running a deficit of approximately $300,000,000 a month, its working balance as of last Friday had been depleted to $739,357,672. The balance in the general fund, however, is $1,597,100,552, consisting of $809,979,307 comprising the gold profit, exclusive of the $2,000,000,000 allocated to the stabilization fund, and $47,763,573 seignorage on silver transactions in addition to the "working balance."

Bond Market Held Favorable.

Although the Treasury believes that the bond market is in a favorable condition, the belief apparently exists in that quarter that it will not stand too large an offering for next month. The banks will be expected to make certain that whatever new funds the Treasury desires will be subscribed.

The weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Board showing the condition of member banks in 91 leading cities revealed that as of last Wednesday these institutions held $6,674,000,000 of direct Government obligations in their portfolios, an increase of $1,563,000,000 over the corresponding day of last year. In addition they held $549,000,000 of obligations guaranteed by the Treasury.

Total loans and investments of these member banks was given as $17,688,000,000, an increase of $1,069,000,000 in the last year. Purchases of Government securities accounted for the increase. Loans by these banks on securities decreased $551,000,000 during the year, while loans on commercial paper, real estate and notes decreased $266000,000.

French Deputy Faces Duel for Praising Hitler

Paris, Nov. 26 (AP).—Seconds for French Deputy Jean Goy were expected to decide before morning whether his honor has been so injured as a result of an interview with Chancellor Hitler that a recourse to arms will be unavoidable.

An interview with Goy published in a Paris newspaper tending to show that the German Chancellor's intentions were sincere caused an altercation in the corridors of the Chamber of Deputies.

Deputy Henri Franklin Bouillon accused Goy of "committing a crime" by publishing the interview and said he considered Goy a "Hitler agent." Goy challenged him to fight. Bouillon also has appointed seconds.

Soviet Raps Japan For Railway Acts

Moscow, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—Charges indicating a virtual reign of terror on the Chinese Eastern Railroad in Manchukuo were made public here tonight in the form of two letters of protest written by the Soviet vice chairman of the board to the road's Manchukuo president.

The Soviet railway official, M. Bandura, submitted a list of 28 cases in which he charges Japanese and Manchukuo officials defied regulations of the C. E. R., abused employes' rights and sometimes physically attacked them without reason.

It was specially charged that Japanese officers without permission and in disregard of normal train schedules often operated armored trains on the line. As a result, it was charged several serious accidents had been averted only by the watchfulness of engineers on the regular trains.

Extortion Notes Are Identified In Robles Case

Appel, Justice Agent, Says They Were Written by Oscar H. Robson.

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 26 (AP).—Oscar H. Robson, accused of sending extortion notes in the kidnaping of 6-year-old June Robles, pleaded not guilty at his preliminary hearing today, but was ordered held for grand jury investigation.

Fernando Robles, father of the child kept for three weeks last spring in a desert "grave" near Tucson, identified ransom notes received while his daughter was missing.

A Government witness testified the missives and samples of Robson's handwriting "were written by the same person."

Denying a defense motion to dismiss the charges, United States Commissioner Daniel Hurley reduced Robson's bail from $100,000 to $50,000 at the suggestion of Clifton Mathews, United States district attorney.

Handwriting Identified.

Robson, former Tucson dance hall operator, listened intently as Charles A. Appel, Department of Justice handwriting expert, testified regarding the ransom notes, which demanded $15,000 for the return of the little girl.

"In my opinion they are identical," Appel said, referring to the notes. He explained he had examined 15 or 20 specimens of Robson's handwriting in reaching his conclusions.

V. L. Hash, defense attorney, sought to discredit Appel as an expert. Appel said he had been in Government employ ten years. Robson's wife sat beside him with her arm across his shoulders.

Chaos Is Feared In Ouster of 900

ployes who are being dropped may be reinstated as easily if they are dismissed outright, or if they are furloughed, because Congress has authority to restore them to their jobs in either case.

Whether the form of dismissal will affect the claim of the employes for December pay, should they be reinstated, appeared a debatable issue yesterday, though Chief Justice Wheat said that if the employes are being unlawfully dismissed they would have a claim for salary in the Court of Claims.

Chief Justice Wheat, in denying the temporary injunction in District Court, declared that the McKellar rider clearly stated that the employes involved should not be paid after December 1, but he said that "the proper method of handling the situation" is entirely up to Secretary Morgenthau.

The Chief Justice said he would not discuss the wisdom or justice of the "patronage rider," which required civil service employes to take a second examination or lose their jobs.

"Spirit Worse Than Letter."

"I haven't any doubt that statute was intended to take away from all these men their salaries after December 1," he said. "The obligation is on the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent payments and leaves the method handling the case entirely in his hands."

The employes, represented by Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, former judge advocate general of the Army, and Col. Edward S. Bailey, contended that though the law barred payment to the employes it did not prescribe that they were to be dismissed. They also asserted that the Secretary is without power to dismiss the employes and that Congress had no right to order it.

John J. Wilson, assistant United States attorney, who appeared for the Secretary of the Treasury, declared that the law is "the proper exercise of the constitutional power of Congress" and that a Government employe has neither a contractual nor vested right in his job.

At one time during his argument, when Wilson stated that the employes' counsel were trying to persuade the court "to look at the spirit rather than the letter of the law," Chief Justice Wheat interjected:

"It seems to me the spirit is worse than the letter."

Federation Will Act.

Denial of the temporary injunction was but the first legal step in what may develop into prolonged litigation. The case was instituted by Paul Sarlo, of Brooklyn, who declined to take the examination prescribed by the McKellar rider.

An application for a permanent injunction is still pending in District Supreme Court and must be answered by the Secretary of the Treasury within 20 days from the date of service, last Monday. Meanwhile, however, the Secretary will have already acted, and the 900 employes will be out of the Government service, whether they be dismissed or furloughed.

The American Federation of Government Employes announced through its presiddent, E. Claude Babcock, that it will also institute action in court in behalf of the alcohol tax unit employes. The federation expressed the view that "several further legal steps are possible, and the most practicable of these will be adopted at the earliest possible moment."

"Meanwhile, sentiment in Congress seems to be turning strongly toward the employes affected by the rider," Babcock said, "and the reaction of the public to the plan, whereby the present vigorous enforcement drive now in progress would be entrusted, after December 1, to a practically new and inexperienced force, appears to be distinctly unfavorable."

Town Acts on Parking Ban.

Frostburg, Nov. 26 (AP).—The mayor and city commissioners here have ordered the repainting of curbs in no parking zones as a result of a number of arrests made recently near the State Normal School, where the paint was entirely effaced.

Choir Practices and Carriages Rehearse for Royal Wedding

These English choir boys don't get much time at home these days, due to intensive practicing in preparation for the wedding Thursday of the Princess Marina and the Duke of Kent. The choir is of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

preceding Marina's marriage on Thursday to the Duke of Kent.

A book called "the authorized story of Princess Marina," published today, revealed to an amused public that Marina once sat on the street car tracks in Athens and refused to budge because her will had been crossed.

Then, according to the book, she repeated the performance a couple of days later despite a warning from her father, Prince Nicholas, that she would be spanked.

Threw Grammar Away.

Another time she "threw her Greek grammar out the window then wept tears of repentance, not because she was sorry at the deed but because the book struck her favorite dog and hurt him."

These anecdotes, quoted from a former English nurse and governess, Kate Fox, now living in Surrey, were added to the public's sum of knowledge concerning the beautiful young woman. Kate was invited to the wedding.

All of them went to Buckingham Palace in the morning and spent a half hour in Marina's private suite.

Duke Receives Gifts.

Ninety-eight guests were invited to the dinner tonight at the palace, at which King George of England, King Christian of Denmark, and King Haakon of Norway sat at the same table.

While interest and excitement caused by the forthcoming wedding spread over London, the provincial village of Himley, where the early part of the honeymoon will be spent, was accepting its place in the spotlight with unruffled calm.

The couple will stay at Himley Hall, the seat of the Earl of Dudley. Himley is a little oasis within the grimy back surrounding country, dotted with ironworks and coal fields.

The bride and bridegroom will drive from Buckingham Palace immediately after the wedding breakfast to Paddington Station, where they will board a special train for Birmingham. From Birmingham they will travel to Himley Hall by car.

Women's Unit Presses Drive Against Drunken Motorists

National Committee Seeks to Enlist Support of the President.

Steer away from alcoholic drinks if you're going to drive a car.

That is the idea the Women's National Committee for Education Against Alcohol wants President Roosevelt to order advertised on posters to be hung in all public buildings.

Arrests of drunken drivers have skyrocketed since prohibition repeal, Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, committee chairman, wrote in a letter to the President which she made public here yesterday. For Washington, the opening months of 1934 had seen drunken driver arrests shoot up 42 per cent above last year, with arrests for drunkenness booming 48 per cent, she said.

A 300 per cent increase for the first half of 1934, as compared to the first half of 1933, was chalked up in injuries and deaths caused by automobile accidents involving intoxicated drivers in Chicago, she said. Detroit has had an increase of 164 per cent in traffic accidents blamed on liquor, she added.

"Drunken drivers do not respect State boundaries," Mrs. Tilton observed ,saying the "Don't Drink and Drive" advertising campaign should be the first step toward national handling of the liquor problem.

War Talk Abroad Scouted by Payne

"War talk" was discounted yesterday by John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, on his return from the fifteenth annual conference of Red Cross societies at Tokyo, the Associated Press says.

"There was no suggestion of impending war as the delegates from practically every nation in the civilized world gathered around the council table," "On the contrary, the discussion centered on ways of making Red Cross societies more effective in dealing with problems which arise in time of peace, and of peace itself."

Payne expressed great pleasure in the progress of the Red Cross roll call, which closes Thanksgiving Day.

Body Found in Barrel in Cincinnati; Wide Hunt Begun for Secretary.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 26 (AP).—The "barrel slaying" of a Brooklyn (N. Y.) jewelry auctioneer led authorities tonight on a widespread search for the victim's secretary and a package reported to contain $20,000 worth of diamonds.

The killing, supposedly committed in the Merz jewelry shop here, came to light today when the nude body of the slain man, Alvin Brunner, was found, stuffed into a barrel, in a Cincinnati garage. He had been shot in the head.

Secretary Is Sought.

A Columbus laundry mark on a pillow case found in the barrel, and a piece of wrapping tape bearing the address of a Columbus jeweler, led authorities to this city, where they picked up shreds of information that led them to order the search for J. S. Berman, identified as Brunner's secretary.

Police officials expressed a hope Berman, if located, could clear up the mystery, and Detective Chief Eugene Ebright said police throughout Ohio have been asked to search for him.

Detective Otto Kaffits disclosed that a woman, whose name he refused to divulge, saw a man she identified as Berman strap a barrel on the rear of Brunner's automobile, parked in the rear of the jewelry store, Sunday noon.

Had Been Selling Gems.

Brunner, a law school graduate who roamed the country selling gems, often carrying large quantities of jewels with him, came to the store of Mr. and Mrs. Reinhard Merz here last Thursday, asking a commission to auction off Merz' stock of jewelry.

Merz was hesitant, he told Chief Ebright, but when Brunner said he and Berman "were down and out," he gave them a bed in the rear of his store. There they slept until Saturday, sometimes bickering about trivial matters, Merz said. Brunner handed Merz a package and said it contained $20,000 worth of diamonds. Merz put it in his safe.

The jeweler made an engagement with Brunner and Berman for Sunday afternoon. When he arrived at the store, Berman informed him Brunner had gone to Dayton and showed him a telegram.

Told to Turn Over Jewels.

"The wire, which he said came from Brunner, instructed me to turn over the jewels to Berman," Merz said. "I went with Berman to the interurban station where he said he was going to take the trolley to Dayton. I didn't see him board the car."

Merz insisted that some time after the interurban for Dayton had left acquaintances of Berman said the man got out of Brunner's car at a restaurant here.

Brunner, police said, apparently was killed without warning. The bullet hole in his head indicated he was shot from behind. A blood stain on the mattress in the Merz store indicated the man lay there for a time after he was shot. A barrel missing from a nearby restaurant indicated the body had been left on the bed while the slayer developed a plan for ridding himself of it.

Italy Declines To Extradite 2 In King's Death

Alleged 'Brains' in Slaying at Marseille Are Denied France.

Turin, Italy, Nov. 26 (AP).—Italian authorities were watching tonight for possible repercussions of Premier Mussolini's second rebuff of Yugoslav attempts to place King Alexander's assassination under the International kleig lights.

Il Duce's Blackshirt court of appeals here refused today to grant France's request for extradition of Dr. Ante Pavelich and Egon Kvaternik, alleged brains of the Marseille slayers.

The Italian dictator's first blast was set off two days ago when Italy demanded the League of Nations give her ally, Hungary, an immediate opportunity to answer Yugoslavia's accusations concerning the regicide.

Basis of Decision.

The court of appeals based its decision upon the Frano-Italian treaty of 1870 which does not allow extradition of political prisoners. The results had been considered a foregone conclusion, but were obtained after much thinking over documents said to show that France's appeal to this same treaty had cheated Mussolini of extradition of his arch-political enemies in some 42 cases.

The press of Italy amply reproduced comment in the French press which found the decision warranted. In view of the decision it was believed unlikely that France will request the extradition of two alleged Croat terrorists, Mile and Budak, who were arrested at Genoa, and another arrested at Turin. All these prisoners still are in jail.

Officials said the French evidence of their culpability must determine whether they shall be tried in Italian courts for complicity in the assassinations of Alexander and Louis Barthou, the French foreign minister.

Demand by France.

France had demanded, on the urgent suggestion of Yugoslavia, that Pavelich be extradited on the grounds that several alleged accomplices in France had named him as their leader. He was the acknowledged head of the Ustachi, a Croat organization which seeks to liberate Croatia from Yugoslav control.

Reports from Vienna were to the effect that the Austrian government strongly supports Hungary and Italy in demanding an immediate hearing of the Yugoslav accusations concerning the harboring of political terrorists responsible for killing the Yugoslav king.

Both Pavelich and Kvaternik denied any connection with the Marseille plot.

Dr. Benes to Withdraw In League Consideration

Geneva, Nov. 26 (AP).—The Yugoslav-Hungarian controversy over responsibility for the slaying of King Alexander resulted today in assurances of the temporary removal of Dr. Eduard Benes, of Czechoslovakia, as president of the League of Nations council.

Hungary demanded the Czech foreign minister's removal while the dispute is under consideration and the league shortly afterward issued a communique stating Dr. Benes had anticipated the move and informed the secretary general before leaving Geneva that he could not act in his official capacity with the council if the Yugoslav appeal were on the agenda.

Hungary had pointed out that Czechoslovakia is a member of the Little Entente, as is also Yugoslavia, and that since the charges are of exceptional gravity, neighborly relations were endangered.

Fear for Safety Of 2 Policemen

Texans Kidnaped by Men Thought Fugitives in Jail Delivery.

Paris, Tex., Nov. 26 (AP).—Fear for the safety of two Paris policemen who were kidnaped and carried away in their patrol car by two men believed to be desperate fugitives increased tonight, as searching parties failed to find any trace of the missing officers or their abductors.

Holdenville, Okla., authorities indicated the policemen, Newt Baker and H. R. Marks, might have been abducted by Ambrose Mix and Arthur Gooch, robbery suspects who escaped jail at Holdenville a month ago. There also were reports that one of the men resembled Raymond Hamilton, but Paris officers doubted that he was involved.

The policemen were taken captive at 3:50 a. m. when they went to a service station to question two men thought to have been involved in a $110 sandwich stand hold-up near Tyler last night. The suspects forced them into the patrol car at pistol point, then sped away to the north.

The abductors abandoned a stolen car here, identified later as having been stolen in Durant, Okla. In the car were found narcotics and some hypodermic needles.

Posses searched northeast Texas today for the missing men, assisted by Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana officers who guarded roads leading into their States.

Strike on Newspaper Continues in Newark

Newark, N. J., Nov. 26 (AP). L. T. Russell, publisher of the Newark Morning Ledger, and the negotiations committee of the Newark Newspaper Guild met today in their second conference, but failed to arrive at any settlement of the strike of the newspaper's editorial workers.

The conference lasted but 15 minutes and ended with both the publisher and the guild issuing statements indicating an agreement was further away than ever.

Reported Pact In Saar Assures Berlin Regime

Laval-Hitler Accord Over Territorial Rights Is Indicated.

Saarbruecken, Saar Territory, Nov. 26 (AP).—France, it was stated tonight in informed quarters, has virtually withdrawn from the Saar plebiscite fight, making a large Nazi victory probable in January.

Foreign Minister Pierre Laval and Chancellor Hitler, said an unconfirmed report, have reached an understanding under which France agrees not to press the anti-Nazi cause and to talk no more about sending the French army into the Saar.

In return, according to this report, the Nazis have agreed to negotiate a financial settlement for the Saar mines as soon as possible.

Stand of Laval.

Laval, it was said, has indicated both to Berlin authorities and to anti-Nazis in the Saar that he is unwilling to continue the battle in favor of a status quo, which would leave the Saar under League of Nations jurisdiction. The fight for this was waged by his predecessor, the late Louis Barthou.

Barthou was the mouthpiece for anti-Nazis at Geneva in their effort to obtain, if possible, a district or two for France and prevent Hitler from obtaining an overwhelming majority in the plebiscite.

Laval, more interested in settling the financial problems now being discussed at Rome, was not expected to give his active support to a request of the anti-Nazis that the League Council grant the right to hold a second plebiscite "after Hitler is gone" should the Saar vote in January to continue indefinitely under the league.

Saarites, the anti-Nazis say, wish to rejoin the fatherland some day, but many who would vote no on league control now would vote yes if they knew they would get another chance to vote later.

The anti-Nazis also seek a clear definition of what a continuation of league government would mean.

Socialists, Communists and dissident Catholics privately admit a change in the French attitude, but express the hope that Saarites going to Germany for the Christmas holidays will return so unimpressed with the Hitler regime that they will vote against joining the Reich.

Max Braun, leader of the German liberty front in the Saar, said today in his newspaper:

"Of course the second plebiscite will be held." Braun has protested from the first against any plebiscite being held. He is leader of the Socialist faction among the Germans in the Saar.

It was rumored that a stiff fight was progressing in the French cabinet over Foreign Minister Laval's attitude toward the Saar. Edouard Herriot, leader of the National Socialists, was said to be opposing Laval and urging him to continue Barthou's firm policy.

Search for Three On Isle Is Delayed

Official in Galapagos Lacks Ship to Probe Mystery.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Nov. 26 (AP). Aurelio Ayala, head of Ecuador's military garrison in the Galapagos Islands, reported today he lacked a ship to go to Floreana Island to investigate the disappearance of Baroness Eloise Wagner and two men settlers of the lonely South Sea archipelago.

Ayala, whose headquarters are on San Cristobal Island, was ordered to inquire into the mystery of two bodies found on the beach of uninhabited Marchena Island, by ascertaining what had become of Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, Robert Philipson and the baroness.

He questioned the report of Capt. Fred Ostrem of the clipper Northwestern that the dead were Lorenz and Arthur Estampa, a Norwegian, saying Estampa had been seen recently on Santa Cruz Island, his usual residence.

Long Desists As Bilbo Hits Tree 'Murder'

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 26 (AP). Senator Huey P. Long abruptly terminated his ax and saw assault on the woods hereabouts today, just as his colleague and neighbor, Senator Theodore G. Bilbo of Mississippi, loosed a broadside on the subject of woodchopping which promised to air some interesting differences between them.

"Woodman, spare that tree," quoted Bilbo, announcing he was saving his own ax for "blustering, deceiving, designing and ambitious politicians that mislead the populace with cheap, tawdry and clownish stunts."

Bilbo made no direct reference to his Senate colleague from Louisiana who came here last week on a delayed "honeymoon" with his bride of 21 years ago and spent two days in the woods, felling pines and chopping them into stovelengths. However, he announced:

"I have no desire to seek cheap notoriety in displaying a German Kaiser Bill habit and a wanton spirit in destroying a single one of your beautiful trees with their autumn dress of glorious and enchanting colors. I had rather breathe the spirit of 'woodman, spare that tree,' because 'God alone can make a tree.'"

Citizens of Ozarks Reject King Huey

Joplin, Mo., Nov. 26 (AP).—A resolution calling upon "all self-respecting citizens" of the Ozarks to "reject and condemn any effort on the part of the Kingfish of Louisiana to associate himself with the Ozarks" was adopted by the executive committee of the Ozark Playgrounds Association today.

The resolution followed published reports that Senator Huey P. Long had conferred upon himself the title, "Huey, King of the Ozarks."

Replying to Long's statement that he assumed the Ozark title with a view of making his sons "princes" or "dukes" of the Ozark realm, the resolution suggested if Long "must have a proper title for his sons, that he commemorate the most famous incident of his own career, in which someone else's fists played a prominent part, by dubbing them the 'Dukes of Long Island.'"

Rise in Farm Equipment Sets 4-Year Record

Crop Yields Improvement and Benefit Payments Start Buying.

New York, Nov. 26.—Because of the improvement in agricultural returns to the farmer and the funds being distributed through crop benefit payments by the Government, manufacturers of farm equipment are anticipating the largest sales next spring that have been recorded since 1930.

Some of the less conservative manufacturers are making preparations for a 100 per cent improvement in the industry next year, basing their plans on the upward trend of produce prices, governmental assistance and the more discriminate and diversified planting of profitable crops.

Recovery in some of the drought-affected States, however, may be slower than now indicated, as the large reductions in cattle and hogs in western Nebraska, Wyoming and South Dakota, and the shortage of small grains and corn experienced this year, will reduce farm income substantially for the ensuing eight to ten months.

Improvement in 1935.

The improvement after that time necessarily will be dependent on the 1935 crops and the price levels then obtaining.

On the whole, indications are favorable for 1935 being particularly propitious for farm equipment sales. Soil conditions have been improved by adequate fall moisture, the farmers already have received enough money to provide the necessities of life, and there is enough remaining to be invested in long-deferred needs in the way of implements and machinery.

Obsolete Equipment Replaced.

Much obsolete equipment was replaced this fall, reducing nearly to depletion inventories which many dealers had been holding for years.

The position of most of the large manufacturers is considered the best it has been in more than three years, as many will show a profit and the others will have a smaller loss than was reported on 1933 operations.

Rigid economies in production and administration have enabled the manufacturers to absorb the increased expenditures incident to the higher labor and material costs, thus giving the farmers the advantage of making their purchases at practically the 1933 price level, according to a survey of the farm equipment trade, which has just been completed by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

Insurance Stocks Are Again Higher

New York, Nov. 26.—Insurance stocks in the New York City market continued their gain during the past week, reaching a new high for 1934 at the close. The aggregate value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues, according to Hoit, Rose & Troster, amounted to $490,765,000 on November 23, against $482,017,000 on November 16, an increase of $8,748,000, or 1.82 per cent. This compares with the low for the year of $326,622,000 reached on January 2.

The current average yield of the 20 issues of 3.78 per cent, compares with a yield of 3.85 per cent a week ago. The current market value is equal to 1.21 times the current liquidating value, against 1.18 times on November 16. Combined operating earnings from underwriting and net investment income are now 9.37 per cent on market, as compared with 9.54 per cent at the close of the previous week, and based upon current figures the 20 issues are now quoted at an average of 10.17 times their combined operating earnings, against 10.5 times on November 16.

Market Closes Thanksgiving.

Danville, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—The Danville tobacco market will close for the Thanksgiving holiday next Wednesday and will not resume until the following Monday. By that time nearly 35,000,000 pounds of leaf is expected to have been sold for close on $11,000,000 since the last week in September.

Tear Gas Used In Los Angeles Car Strike Riot

Violence Follows Report of Truce in Trolley Walk-Out.

Los Angeles, Nov. 26 (AP).—Rioting among nearly 2,000 street car strikers and passengers broke out in the downtown district late today shortly after the possibility of a truce in the dispute was announced.

Police hurled tear gas bombs to clear away the crowd at Seventh street and South Broadway as more than 25 cars were stalled when trolleys were pulled off power wires and guide ropes cut.

All police reserves were ordered to the scene. Street car passengers, becoming frightened as the cars were stopped on all lines at the intersection, ran into the street and began milling about.

Eight Are Arrested.

Eight men were arrested when they assertedly started to jerk trolleys on other approaching street cars.

A statement the strike would be settled within 48 hours was made by a labor leader, who preferred to remain anonymous, after a conference of employes and employers at the mayor's office.

While the conferees talked at the first meeting police were busy removing bowlders from street car tracks at Forty-eighth and Budlong streets, and a half-dozen instances of stone-throwing were reported. Thirty-six persons have been injured during the three-day strike.

Those at Conference.

Meeting with Mayor Frank Shaw were four representatives of the car company, two spokesmen for the union and Adolph W. Hoch, former president of the California Federation of Labor, the mayor's intermediary.

Just before the conference started, the mayor was called upon by the Downtown Business Men's Association to take immediate action to insure safety of street car passengers in the central business area.

Dain Sturges, secretary of the association, told the mayor a survey indicated many persons were being kept away from the shopping area because of acts of violence against cars and their crews. Coming as the Christmas shopping season is opening, this is injuring business generally, Sturges contended.

Seeking Agreement.

Leaving his bed against his physicians' advice, Mayor Shaw said he hoped to gain an agreement by which the differences between the company and the union over wages and hours would be referred immediately to an arbitration board. Acts of violence were blamed by union men on irresponsible sympathizers. Union officials reiterated they had advised all strikers to avoid violence.

Track Plan Decided For Kennedy Street

A plan for double street car tracks on Kennedy street was tentatively decided on by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

Decision of the commission was regarded as somewhat important because it was a precedent which indicated continued development of street car lines, rather than wide expansion of supplementary bus lines.

Final Hearings In I'm Alone Case Are Fixed

5-Year-Old Controversy Over Canada Liquor Ship Nears End.

(Associated Press.)

A ghost of prohibition's rum-running days arose yesterday when final hearings in the famous "I'm Alone" case were set for Christmas week.

Canada claims $386,803 damages from the United States because the vessel was shelled by a Coast Guard cutter and sent to the bottom off the Louisiana Coast on March 22, 1929. The case has been in controversy ever since.

At Ottawa in June, 1933, the commissioners named to adjudicate—Willis Van DeVanter, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and Sir Lyman Poore Duff, chief justice of the Canadian supreme Court—decided all questions of law involved.

Daniel E. Halpin, alias Danny Hogan, said by the United States to be the real owner of the famous rum-runner, now is in Northeastern Penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pa. As the hearing date was set, he made a bid for freedom.

Halpin brought habeas corpus proceedings, alleging that he is wrongfully imprisoned because the two prison sentences he is serving are running consecutively and not concurrently.

He was sentenced to 3 years in prison in New Orleans on June 15, 1930, for smuggling liquor, disguised as "rice screenings," from the Gulf of Mexico.

Later he was convicted of landing liquor camouflaged as "fish" from the Rex II at Thomas Wharf, Va.

The vital question to be decided concerns the actual ownership of the I'm Alone.

The United States contends that the vessel was actually owned by Halpin and American associates in a rum-running syndicate.

The Canadian government is pressing the damage claim on grounds the vessel was owned by the Eugene Creaser Shipping Co., of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

A second problem for the commissioners is exactly where the I'm Alone was sunk.

The United States claims she was fired upon and sunk by the cutter Dexter after refusals to halt, 8¼ miles from the American shore. That is within the one hour's steaming time search and seizure distance specified in the British-American antirum-running pact of 1924.

The Canadian government claims the I'm Alone was 14 miles from shore.

Canada's claim for $386,000 covers the vessel and 2,800 cases of rum, brandy and whisky in the cargo.

A French seaman from the island of St. Pierre, Leon Maingoy, was drowned when the vessel sank. The French government, however, has never filed a claim.

Officer Found Dead In Transport Cabin

Manila, Nov. 26 (AP).—Lieut. Harold F. Hale, officer of the United States naval transport Chaumont, which arrived here Sunday from San Francisco, was found dead in his cabin with a pistol nearby the day after the ship left Honolulu, fellow officers said today as an official investigation opened into what was believed a suicide.

Illinois Vote Sets Record.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 26 (AP).—The State canvassing board today announced the vote in the November 6 elections totaled 2,935,192, a new record for an off-year. The board also confirmed the ratification of a proposal for a $30,000,000 unemployment relief bond issue.

Import Limit Lifted On Alcohol Beverages

The Federal Alcohol Control Administration will permit unlimited imports of alcoholic beverages from January 1 to February 28 by holders of import permits, it was announced yesterday.

This decision is a furthering of the governmental program of stimulating liquor importations for the twin purpose of raising revenue and fighting bootleggers.

Thomas Warns Inflationists To 'Walk Easy'

(Associated Press.)

Currency inflationists were advised yesterday by one of their leaders to tread cautiously in the next Congress, and to stek no early showdown.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, outlining strategy, said he believed there should be a period of waiting for the results of what he called a Presidential mandate to business to improve conditions.

Recent Administration gestures to business were described by the Oklahoman as indicative that President Roosevelt wanted industry to be left, as far as possible, with a free hand during the next few months to see what it could do.

That situation, he said, counseled a "waiting game" by the monetary reformers.

Thomas tacitly conceded that if a material improvement in conditions resulted there would be little chance for favorable inflationary action next session. Should business efforts fall short, however, he said inflationary strength would grow.

"We will keep our program consistently before the country," he said, "during the period of waiting."

Thomas indicated he believed the Administration was going to try to hold Congress to a brief program.

At the same time, another silverite was taking issue with Senator King (Democrat), Utah, that the present silver situation was satisfactory.

Just back for the next session, Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado, however, was less critical of the present program than have been other Senators who split with King. Adams asked simply an acceleration of silver purchases.

"The continuation in good faith and energy of the silver-purchase program," Adams said, "is going to raise the price until the gap between legal values, that is coinage and market values, is largely obliterated. Then we can talk of opening the mints to free coinage.

"I think we ought to let the purchase program go on with some speeding up. We can utilize the silver for our currency on what is equivalent to a free-coinage base."

Builder Urges Policy Changes

Glenn L. Martin Proposes New Procurement Plan for Aircraft.

Radical changes in Government aircraft procurement policy were recommended yesterday to the Federal Aviation Commission by Glenn L. Martin, airplane manufacturer.

He proposed that design competitions, to be followed by quantity orders awarded on a basis of competitive bidding, be used as the basis for aircraft procurement.

The manufacturers submitting the best designs, he suggested, should receive small orders on a cost-plus basis or at a fixed price. Bids for large numbers of planes, he suggested should be limited to winners of the design competition.

He warned against throwing aircraft bids open to all manufacturers, saying: "Any plan of procurement providing centralized specification and design which has been built up on the theory that the average manufacturer can produce them will result in mediocre airplanes."

N. Y. Bank Stocks Steady in Week

New York, Nov. 26.—New York City bank stocks held steady during the past week. The aggregate value of 16 leading issues, according to Hoit, Rose & Troster, totaled $1,381,360,000 on November 23 against $1,381,112,000 at the close of the previous week, an increase of $248,000, or 0.02 per cent.

The current average yield of the 16 issues is 5.79 per cent, unchanged for the week. The current market value is now 1.13 times their known book value, and based upon current figures the 16 issues are now quoted at an average of 9.8 times their known earnings, both unchanged for the week.

Woman Bilked; Appeals Court Flays Swindle

Holds Accused Man's Partner Not Liable; $10,000 Lost in Deal.

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday affirmed the action of the District Supreme Court in returning a verdict holding that Mrs. Maude S. McLemore could not recover $10,000 which she invested with Otto B. McLean for a fourth interest in the property at 1514 K street northwest.

In a suit filed in the District Supreme Court, Mrs. McLemore charged McLean sold her for $10,000 his interest in a one-fourth quota of the property. It was shown she had purchased her interest through McLean, who had entered the proposition with three others. He failed to make good his share of the purchase price, and he then accepted the money from Mr. McLemore for his interest.

The property was eventually purchased and when Mrs. McLemore asked for her share she was told that no interest belonged to her. She sued John F. Maury, partner of McLean, and the court held that while McLean had been guilty of a swindle, his partner had no knowledge of it and could not be held accountable.

Mrs. McLemore was unable to secure court service on McLean, and when she went to trial she had only Maury as a defendant. In sustaining the decision, the Court of Appeals decried her inability to bring McLean before the court so the merits of her claim against him could be met.

Manila Terrified By Hard Temblor

Quake Lasts 36 Minutes; Populace in Panic.

Manila, Nov. 26 (AP).—The Manila area, recently wracked by a typhoon and floods which cost more than 100 lives, was shaken tonight by an earthquake which inflicted minor damage and sent the populace into panic. No casualties were reported.

Some bamboo dwellings in the slum districts were shaken down, and cornices and windows of downtown buildings were cracked. Telephone and power lines also suffered.

The shock continued 36 minutes, starting at 8:09 p. m. (7:09 a. m. Eastern standard time). Crowds in the city's theaters rushed to the streets, where they were joined by thousands of others, amid great excitement. The Weather Bureau described the earthquake as the most severe in "many years."

Prajadhipok to Get 2 Autos From Home

Bangkok, Siam, Nov. 26 (AP).—The ministry of the royal household is shipping two big automobiles from the royal garage to King Prajadhipok in London, it was revealed today.

This was generally believed to indicate that the monarch proposes to prolong his stay abroad, with the probability of abandoning his decision to abdicate becoming more remote than ever.

Monte Carlo Will Cut 'Take' to Lure Trade

Monte Carlo, Nov. 26 (AP).—The famous gambling casino here, seeking to lure back the customers hit by the depression, decided today to give them a better break.

Starting December 1, the admission to the gaming room will be free and, for one-half hour daily, the zero on the roulette wheels—on which the casino ordinarily takes all, will be suppressed.

Former Countess of Cathcart Sues for Divorce Once More

Rowland is expected to contest the action.

When Vera, former countess of Cathcart, arrived in the United States on the liner Carmania on February 9, 1926, she was detained at Ellis Island by immigration authorities, arousing one of the most sensational moral controversies in history.

The countess, whose first husband was De Grey Warter, and her second the Earl of Cathcart, said she was detained because she was divorced from the Earl of Cathcart.

Immigration commissioners, however, claimed she had been ordered excluded from the United States "because she admitted the commission of the crime involving moral turpitude."

She had admitted a love affair with the young Earl, of Craven, whom Cathcart named as co-respondent.

The countess appealed to the Secretary of Labor and other high authorities. Women's organizations took a stand in her behalf, pointing out that the Earl of Craven, with his wife, was already in the United States and asking why the same ruling had not been applied to him.

When the Department of Labor granted the countess a limited permit to enter the country she appeared in a stage production "Ashes of Love," a drama depicting her own life.

The Earl of Cathcart died the following year, leaving to his divorced wife a trust fund of $2,500 annually.

Bruno's Defense Submits Questions

Suspect's Birthday Marked by Quiz in Lindbergh Case.

Flemington, N. J., Nov. 26 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's defense counsel today marked the Lindbergh kidnap-murder suspect's thirty-sixth birthday by formally asking the State to answer 12 questions regarding its case against the German carpenter.

The request for a bill of particulars was served on Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck by Lloyd Fisher, associate defense counsel. Hauck declined to disclose the questions pending a conference with Attorney General David T. Wilentz.

It was known previously, however, the defense would ask the State to make known whether it intended to prosecute on the theory the slaying of the Lindbergh baby was premeditated or planned to try to prove death occurred during the commission of felony.

No Rail Receiverships Impending, Jones Says

A statement that no major receiverships in railroads are impending was made yesterday by Chairman Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Associated Press says.

Asked at his press conference concerning reports that he was going to see to it that there were no receiverships, Jones said:

"I haven't made any such statement, but, so far as I know, no receiverships are impending."

The chairman also said the corporation would extend a $7,000,000 loan to the Southern Railroad.

Job Insurance Bill Drafted in New York

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—A group of experts called together by the New York State industrial commissioner drew up today a State unemployment insurance bill which is to be recommended to Gov. Herbert H. Lehman for enactment early next year.

Benefits would be paid from a pooled State fund to which all private employers hiring four or more employes would contribute amounts equal to 3 per cent of the pay rolls.

N.Y. Police Told To 'Use Bullets' On Criminals

Advised by Commisisoner Valentine That He'll Back Them Up.

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—New York's two-fisted police commissioner, Lewis J. Valentine, laid down a "treat 'em rough" policy today.

"The sky is the limit" on thugs and gorillas and assassins, he declared, urging his men to get there first with the most bullets.

"Let the crook be the one carried away in the box, not the cop."

Valentine, who was once demoted from inspector to captain because his raids on gambling games aroused the ire of politicians, said later he wanted to impress upon his men that they need have no fear of political reprisals.

Valentine was patently aroused at the line-up when there came before his view a dapper, sleek-haired man accused of complicity in a murder.

"Look at him, the best dressed man in this room," said the commissioner.

The suspect, who had a record of 18 arrests but no convictions, looked as if "he had just stepped out of a bandbox," he added.

"He doesn't work and he doesn't know what work is. When you get up against men like him don't hesitate. I shall protect you. The district attorneys will protect you. Bring these known criminals in mussed up."

Valentine, who became head of the force last September, made it plain that police were to guard carefully against harming innocent persons. His lecture was concerned solely with known gunmen and mayhem artists, he said.

President's Remodeled Office Paragon of Dignity and Taste

Entering the executive offices building, you will find a greatly enlarged and improved press room on the right, instead of on the left, as formerly. It has a long battery of telephone booths, half a dozen desks and an immaculate lavatory in tile.

Secretaries' Offices Near.

Proceeding across the lobby's rubber-tiled floor, you encounter the secretaries' offices. Stephen T. Early, of the secretariat, was occupying his yesterday.

The office of Marguerite Le Hand, personal secretary, adjoins the President's. Next to it is the cabinet room, which has the same table and chairs as of old. It is somewhat larger now.

To the left, or east, of the lobby is a spacious conference room. It has a special cork floor, made necessary because it is directly above the air-conditioning plant. The cork will serve as an insulator against the moderate amount of noise engendered by the plant.

Clerical workers, mail openers, etc., will share the ground floor with the pretentious air-conditioning system. Staff offices likewise are being established on the second floor, something which was not possible under the old scheme of things.

The second floor was converted from a useless attic by raising the roof a trifle and eliminating the maze of trusses. Chiefly by this means, suggested by the Fine Arts Commission, was it possible to increase the building's space from 15,000 to 40,000 square feet and bring the President's entire working staff under one roof.

"Sunken Garden Office" Unique.

Previously the White House personnel was scattered over the executive office building, White House proper and State, War and Navy Building. Even so, some of the rooms were overburdened with workers and night shifts had to be instituted to relieve the working crush. All that is history now, said Lieut. Lock.

A unique feature is the sunken garden office on the ground floor which is invisible from the street. It was devised by Eric Gugler, consulting architect, to meet the demand for more working space without adding to the outside mass.

N. P. Severin & Co., Chicago, was the contractor for the job, which was rushed to completion in 100 days.

Lieut. Lock said all moving should be completed by tomorrow and everything will be shipshape for President Roosevelt's return the first week in December.

French 'Purification' Campaign Holds 438

Twenty-two suspects were seized, bringing the total of arrests to 438 in three nights. Many of them were foreigners, mostly held for infractions of expulsion orders. The activity followed a tightening of government supervision over foreigners following the Marseille assassinations.

Wallace Sees A 'New Epoch' For Farmers

Believes Local Groups Will Take Over All Adjustment Work.

(Associated Press.)

Secretary Henry A. Wallace peered into the future yesterday and saw the possibility of "true democracy" for America.

The Agriculture Secretary, whom New Dealers hail as one of their top-notch thinkers and philosophers, pinned his hopes in part on the work of farmers in production control associations. These are local groups that take a hand in adjusting local problems as part of the AAA's gigantic attempt to restore agriculture.

"In the long view of history," Wallace said, "things that are happening now on the 6,000,000 farms of the country may be the beginning of a new epoch, in which democracy, embracing the economic as well as the political field, becomes for the first time a reality."

Sees Adjustment Change.

As far as agricultural adjustment is concerned, the Secretary added:

"I think there is a strong possibility that the local groups will one day take over all the work of agricultural adjustment except those national decisions which can be best made by a central organization correlating the needs and productivity of all groups."

Illustrating the point, he reiterated a statement from his book, "New Frontiers," which said:

"A modern Democracy, in my opinion, is essentially a graded hierarchy of New England town meetings with responsible, democratically selected people dealing with the hard facts at every step.

'Again and again the methods employed by County Control Associations in the AAA seem to me to point the way."

Admits Mistakes Made.

The Secretary acknowledged that the control associations which make necessary adjustments with individual farmers, had made mistakes —"thousands of them." A few of these were deliberate with intent to defraud, he said, "but most of them honestly developed the concept of justice for the parts in terms of the whole."

The men and women in these groups and the people with whom they dealt "dropped the mean, grasping local attitude and stretched their thinking," he said, rather proudly.

"They developed the backbone needed to resist the pressure of powerful men striving to get more than their just deserts. Thousands of people thus began for the first time to think in a vivid, unprejudiced way of larger relationships."

This innovation in the Democratic system, the Secretary added, "is enormously significant especially if a more definite social machinery is eventually provided to bring about a council of agriculture, labor, industry and consumers."

Man Shoots Wife, Priest in Hotel

The latter, Steinmetz related, said he had better keep the pistol.

"Steinmetz said he felt tired and the priest suggested he lay down for a while. This Steinmetz did and in a few minutes he heard the priest say to his wife: 'Why don't you come downstairs to my room and make a confession."

Tells of Shooting.

"The priest and Mrs. Steinmetz left the room. In a few minutes, Steinmetz said he followed them and knocked on the door of the priest's room. The priest told him to come in. Steinmetz said he asked the priest where his pistol was. The priest told him it was in his coat pocket. Steinmetz got the pistol and fired at the priest and his wife.

"He said: 'My mind was all in a whirl. I don't remember anything after firing.'"

Price said there were some details he could not divulge; that these would hvae to come from District Attorney William C. Dodge.

The assistant would not discuss the state of dress of those shot by Steinmetz. From other official sources at the police station, it was learned the bodies when found by the medical examiner were only partially clad.

Steinmetz was questioned for several hours at the West Forty-seventh street police station and then was taken to headquarters for the night. He will be taken through the line-up tomorrow as a formality and then arraigned on a homicide charge.

Identified as Priest.

A handsome youth, with curly chestnut hair, Steinmetz was nervous when brought to the Forty-seventh street station.

The management of the hotel would not discuss the case. But Price said the priest registered at the hotel as John J. Leonard, of Trenton, N. J.

In his colthing, however, was found a driver's license issued to the Rev. Joseph J. Leonard, of Lawrenceville ,and it was by this that the identification was finally made.

Among Mrs. Steinmetz's effects was a registration card of the Hollywood High School. The marriage certificate, found in the room, showed she was married under the maiden name of Ruth T. Tiles.

Steinmetz renounced the faith of Judaism to study for the ministry and entered the Bible Institute in Los Angeles. He worked for a time in a Hollywood hotel as a clerk and was employed on several occasions in a minor capacity at movie studios.

Price said their investigation showed his wife had "a couple of minor roles in the movies."

Unions Launch Auto and Steel Member Drive

Veteran Organizers Working From Great Lakes to West Virginia.

Drives for new members in the big automobile and steel industries will be launched shortly by the American Federation of Labor, it was learned yesterday.

A force of veteran organizers will invade steel and automobile towns from the Great Lakes to West Virginia. Their goal will be to put union cards in the pockets of hundreds of thousands of workers. So far, the union has enlisted only a fraction of the 1,000,000 employes in the two industries.

The campaign is expected to be strengthened by action of the recent federation convention at San Francisco in clearing the way for organization of many large industries on a vertical basis, permitting one compact group for each industry instead of several craft unions in a single trade.

Repeated threats of strikes in the steel and automobile industries have failed to materialize in the past, largely due to thin union ranks. Success of the membership offensive might result in a formidable challenge to President Roosevelt's proposal for an industrial truce.

Employes in the automobile union have urged William Green, federation president, to demand the resignation of Leo Wolman, chairman of the industry's labor relations board, for alleged favoritism to employers and failure to issue any decisions benefiting workers.

Members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers have been restless for months over failure of the steel labor relations board to order elections for selection of collective bargaining representatives in several Pennsylvania mills.

Interstate Regulation Of Oil Production Urged

Los Angeles, Nov. 26 (AP).—Harry F. Sinclair, chairman of the Consolidated Oil Corporation, told a Congressional sub-committee here today he believed regulation of oil production by interstate compact is more desirable than Federal control.

"Federal control would mean centralization of power in a bureau at Washington," he said. "The State compact plan decentralizes control and permits local and State government to function."

Hopkins Tells Source Of Criticism on Relief

Chicago, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, said today that he referred to the National Economy League in his address before the National Conference of Mayors Friday when he answered charges of extravagance in dispensing relief funds.

He did not have in mind the American Liberty League, he said, when he told the mayors, "Some league—I forget what league it was," had been critical of relief expenditures to the extent of asking for a billion-dollar reduction.

Guests at Democrats' Dance To Give Toys for Post Fund

Miss McSwain, Chairman of Affair, Arranges for Donation.

With the spirit of Christmas in their hearts, the guests attending the dance of the Young Democrats Club of Washington at the Hotel Carlton on Friday night will take toys to be donated afterwards to The Washington Post Toy Fund for needy children.

This welcome news came yesterday from Miss Janie McSwain, daughter of Representative James J. McSwain, of Greenville, S. C., chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, who is social chairman in charge of the dance. In offering the cooperation of the club Miss McSwain said that Santa Claus would be on hand Friday night to receive the gifts, which are to be placed beneath a decorated Christmas tree. Later the toys will be delivered to The Post Toy Fund headquarters at 1418 H street northwest.

More than 200 guests are expected at the dance and Assistant Secretary of War Harry Woodring and Assistant Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman are among its patrons. This is the second social affair scheduled for the near future when toys for The Post Fund will serve as special cards of admission, as it were, the first announced being the dance of the New England States Society to be held in December.

Prepare Headquarters.

Santa Claus aids were busy yesterday fixing up the new Post Toy Fund headquarters at 1418 H street, lent by the Woodward Building authorities. Mrs. J. M. Daugharty, of 3606 Quesada street northwest, was the first person to visit the headquarters, bringing with her a gift of toys.

These toys and similar gifts will be reconditioned in time for delivery on Christmas morning via Santa Claus and his reindeer to needy Washington children. The telephone of The Post Toy Fund headquarters is Sterling 4746 and persons having toys they wish to donate may call this number and they will be collected.

From another Washington mother came a pathetic appeal yesterday for aid in providing a merry Christmas for her little ones. She writes to The Post Toy Fund:

"I have six children ranging from three months to eight years. My husband works on relief, making hardly enough to feed them properly, with nothing for clothing and toys. They are looking forward to Santa Claus bringing them something. I hope they won't be disappointed. Last year I could not buy them a toy and they didn't have a piece of candy or a nut. Please try to help them so they will have a Happy Christmas."

Toy Contest.

The Washington Post Toy Fund can avert the tragedy of a toyless Christmas for this family this year and this mother's appeal is being investigated and on Christmas Eve a bag of toys will go to her with which she can fix up a Merry Christmas for her little ones.

Jane Lillie, 12, of 4306 Thirteenth street northeast, was the first to contribute a doll to the fund through an unusual contest in which The Post will award 20 prizes of toys donated by Lansburgh's department store. Girls are invited to dress dolls and boys to make hand-made toys for this contest.

The 20 best entries received will win Shirley Temple dolls, trains and other toys as prizes. All the dolls and toys submitted in this contest will be turned over to The Post Toy Fund for distribution. Complete details of the contest will be announced in The Post on Sunday.

Conference Set On Insull Case

Cummings Calls Federal Prosecutor Here to Consider Action.

(Associated Press.)

Attorney General Cummings yesterday summoned United States Attorney Dwight H. Green from Chicago for a conference to determine disposition of indictments still pending against Samuel Insull, Chicago utilities promoter and his associates.

Cummings told reporters:

"Mr. Green will be here tomorrow. We will hold a conference to determine what proceedings should be taken."

Cummings indicated that the principal indictment remaining against the former utilities operator was that of violating the bankruptcy act.

Chicago, Nov. 26 (AP).—United States Attorney Dwight H. Green declined comment today on his impending conference with Attorney General Cummings on the second Federal charge against Samuel Insull.

Insull has already entered a "not guilty" plea to the charge, accusing him and his associates of removing assets from the Corporation Securities Co. in violation of the bankruptcy laws.

Muddled Planning.

Many observers have pointed out the inconsistency between the agricultural adjustment and subsistence homestead programs. Official agencies have replied that the homesteads constructed in rural communities for families of the unemployed are not designed for commercial farming. Their chief purpose is to furnish destitute families with the necessities of life. Obviously, that explanation does not dispose of the issue.

In an article in The Post last Sunday Stanley F. Morse pointed out that while jobless urban families are being moved to subsistence homesteads, farmers who are unable to make a living without Government aid continue to produce a surplus of staple crops. Mr. Morse suggests that these submarginal farmers, and not the unemployed from industrial centers, should become subsistence homesteaders. His argument contains a soundness of logic that might well be considered at PWA and AAA headquarters.

Crop curtailment as it has been carried out by the AAA is necessarily an expedient. Any permanent plan for the control of farm output must concentrate upon elimination of land that is not suitable for cultivation. The Government is purchasing some land of this sort, but the AAA also contemplates movement of the farmers so displaced to better lands. If better lands are really available, such a project would result in increased agricultural production and thus defeat the purpose of curtailment.

The AAA adjustment program has aggravated the plight of the submarginal farmer. His future status is a serious challenge to the agricultural planners. And the tendency to shift city workers into a niche that these experienced but destitute farmers might well fill adds to the hopelessness of their outlook. In planning a project that is so closely related to agriculture the interests of the submarginal farmer certainly deserve more consideration than they appear to have received.

Chaos In The Wheat Bin.

A few years ago the United States was one of the largest wheat-exporting nations in the world. France was a wheat-importing country, with a market of considerable importance. Now France is demanding, at the meeting of the International Wheat Advisory Commission in Budapest, an export quota twice as great as that accepted for this country by the American delegation.

The French government stimulated enormous wheat crops in 1933 and 1934 by the subsidy method. But like our own AAA the economic planners of France became victims of nature's trickery. Planning for self-sufficiency, they were overwhelmed by a disastrous surplus that must be dumped on the world market at heavy losses or allowed to rot in its bins. In this country a curtailment program was accentuated by drought, which has virtually taken American wheat out of the world market. Last week not a single bushel of wheat moved abroad.

This distorted situation would be ridiculous if it were not so very tragic. Consumers in western Europe must pay high prices for bread, while farmers of the Americas and Australia find no adequate outlets for their natural product. As Secretary Wallace has been pointing out, tariffs and quotas throughout Europe are so drastic that even low world prices "have little power to stimulate consumption."

France has indicated a desire to resume her position as an importing nation, if given an opportunity to dispose of her present wheat surplus on the world market. But the Wheat Commission finds no reason to anticipate an increased demand in the international market during the next few years. Japan has greatly increased her wheat output in an effort to attain self-sufficiency. Many other countries are protecting their growers, regardless of costs.

To this gloomy picture must be added a refusal of Argentina to accept the proposal for continuation of acreage curtailment next year. Argentine and Canadian wheat are already selling considerably below the Chicago price. If production in the former country remains unrestricted (Argentina exceeded her quota by 34,000,000 bushels this year) these price disparities probably will be widened.

Uncoordinated national planning in a score of countries has brought the wheat-growing industry into a state of chaos which even a conscientious and permanent international agency seems totally unable to resolve.

A Matter Of Principle.

There is an underlying aspect of the Ickes-Moffett housing controversy of even more fundamental importance than any on which public attention has as yet been concentrated. This is the philosophy of government on which the Secretary of the Interior took his stand in arguing for Federal construction of homes at rates with which private industry could not hope to compete.

There is no argument over Mr. Ickes' contention that the PWA can build small homes on a virtually philanthropic basis. It is, as the Secretary rightly says, just like the power situation. By exerting its vast authority or by making the taxpayer absorb concealed costs, the Government can produce and market any commodity at any price deemed "socially desirable." It is not difficult to visualize a Government peanut monopoly which could readily vend the succulent goobers at prices far below those of the push-cart men. None can question the ability of the Government to displace any form of business at its pleasure, assuming adequate elasticity of constitutional interpretation.

But where Mr. Ickes' thinking outspeeds that of most is in the assumption that because the Government can do this, it should do this. And, judging by the Secretary's attitude toward the FHA, he feels that the State should compete not with the idea that such competition may eventually restore private enterprise, but rather to remove some forms of business permanently from the scene of national activity.

On this point Mr. Ickes owes the public more of an explanation than he has heretofore been pleased to vouchsafe. For there is still a general assumption in this country that efficient private enterprise has a right to exist, and to make reasonable profits in return for adequate services. And the counterpart of that assumption is that the function of Government is to keep within fairly well-defined lines, which should be expanded at the expense of private enterprise only when there is clear proof that such development is in the public interest.

A fundamental alteration in this traditional attitude is a very important matter. It is not a matter on which the decision of an appointed Cabinet Minister on what is socially desirable can be regarded as final. Indeed it is not at all a matter of administration of policy, but one of policy-creation of the most vital character.

That is why a definite decision by the President in the obvious breach between Mr. Ickes and Mr. Moffett is desirable, for reasons which go much deeper than the need for administrative clarification in the housing program.

Par Three.

Eyes which have lately been turned on London from every quarter of the globe, seeking some sign of naval agreement, on Sunday saw two diplomats playing a game of golf. One was Norman Davis; the other Tsuneo Matsudaira, respectively chiefs of the American and Japanese delegations. Like two modern business men they went around the course, hitting little white balls, and talking.

Once Aristide Briand and David Lloyd George played a political game of golf at Cannes, which nearly resulted in political disaster for the former. But there have been no signs of repercussions from Tokyo over the Matsudaira-Davis match. Whatever the score, and that is not reported, the Japanese must have felt that their delegate was winning his seemingly casual game, in which the participants discussed, in most friendly manner, the serious question of the way in which Japan can best denounce the Washington Naval Treaty.

Man, it has often been said, is a strange animal. Here is proof of the saying. He goes out of a Sunday morning to green pastures, peaceful and pleasant in the late autumn sun, and whacks and pats a ball around! And between strokes he talks about the best way to dissolve a treaty of vast international significance. Thus are the events of history arranged.

A Momentous Question.

It is doubtful if assiduous searching of the book stalls will reveal any volume by Dikran Kouyoumdjian, but in the backwash of literary remainders it is quite possible to pick up the flotsam of Michael Arlen, who is one and the same person. This Armenian, who was born in Bulgaria and later became a naturalized British citizen, was a literary sensation some few years ago. Today, one William Saroyan, also of Armenian ancestry, has swept down upon the so-called literary scene and is just as much a sensation as Kouyoumdjian-Arlen of the Twenties.

So considerable has been the commotion caused by this daring young man on the lit'ry trapeze, whose short stories are supposed to reach the nadir of something-or-other, that a squabble has already started over who discovered him. There have been several contenders for the honor—a doubtful honor, perhaps, unless he continues to deserve the attention which his early works have brought to him.

It appears that his first real discoverer is known, but as yet unnamed. Writing under the name of Sirak Goryan, Saroyan sent some of what he calls short stories to an American-Armenian newspaper in Boston. There they were found by Mr. Edward J. O'Brien, who has been credited with reading everything that may have a short story in it, and who lifted one from that utter obscurity to the prominence of his annual anthology. But nobody knew Goryan was Saroyan until the other day, when this "news" furnished a paragraph for the chroniclers of what our forebears called literary intelligence. Some day it may be decided just who discovered Saroyan-Goryan—but will he then be willing to say why?

The Real Reason.

The refusal of Williams College to accept FERA money to aid needy students recently aroused Administrator Hopkins to denounce "overly-endowed aristocratic institutions" that raise objections to this policy. Now Dr. Tyler Dennett, president of Williams, has answered the implied rebuke by accusing Mr. Hopkins of demagoguery, and asserting that his charges show "the great dangers to the Republic incident to the recent growth of bureaucracy in Washington." Behind this war of words lies an issue of tremendous importance to the educational world.

Dr. Dennett dismisses the imputation of snobbishness by pointing out that the college is now "in the red" as the result of using general funds to augment student scholarships. He says, too, that nearly one-fourth of the students are receiving aid, and many are earning part or all of their board by waiting on table and performing other menial tasks. The picture of an opulent student body attending a richly-endowed institution of learning vanishes, but the mystery of the refusal to accept FERA money is not lessened.

A clew to the reason for that refusal is found in Dr. Dennett's statement that a Williams professor who may happen to disapprove of the New Deal is spared the embarrassment of arguing against his own salary. Dr. Dennett is not, of course, implying that his teaching staff is hostile to the practices of the FERA or any of the other Federal agencies. He is merely emphasizing the value of an environment in which academic freedom is not encroached upon by governmental subsidies.

That freedom is necessarily circumscribed when an institution comes to rely upon money contributed by taxpayers to its support. The unhappy experiences of many State universities, compelled to suppress free thought and free speech in their classrooms as the price of legislative support, have taught us the dangers of permitting bureaucracy to enter academic halls.

The public schools and the State colleges and universities can not expect to enjoy the untrammeled freedom that some of the endowed institutions—but not all of them by any means—are privileged to exercise. Taxpayers and their legislative representatives have to exercise restraint upon the officials who direct public education. But the fact that the line between permissible dictation of policies and suppression of academic freedom is so easily overstepped, and unfortunately so often ignored, makes it the more important to preserve the independence of colleges and universities able to function without State aid.

It would be a national misfortune if, in the guise of student aid, bureaucrats should obtain a foothold in these hitherto free domains. It might prove a long first step toward bringing the entire system of higher education in America under the blighting influence of the State. The ultimate consequences of such interference are exemplified by the situation which exists in Germany, where the teaching of the social sciences can no longer be carried on by men who place integrity of thought above glorification of the economic and social principles that govern Nazi policy.

Our New Territory.

Admiral Richard E. Byrd has sent word from Little America that as a result of an airplane flight under the midnight sun he has claimed 200,000 miles of antarctic wasteland for the United States. Theoretically, at least, the American flag flies over a large territory east of the 150th meridian, adjacent to the British claims in the Ross dependency. Thus, away down there, is developing a territorial situation analogous to that of the United States and Canada.

So far none of the romantic or scientific explorations of Admiral Byrd have informed us of what material value this land, or the nearby transcontinental strait believed to be lying beneath the ice sheet, will be to the nation for which he has claimed it. It grows nothing, produces nothing, and can be turned to no actual good. Were the strait to be cleared of ice it would be of little use to navigation in these approaching days of air transportation.

One thing is certain, however. Unless some "use" may be found in the future for all this land and ice and sea water, the United States is proud possessor of one large territory over which there will never be a war, which will never even see a machine gun. Perhaps, in our highly civilized world, this is the best kind of a possession for any nation to have.

The remains of huge prehistoric monsters recently discovered in the United States indicate that the animals had a brain weighing less than an ounce. It isn't anything new for this country to be overrun by politicians.

It's getting to be sort of monotonous to a lot of us to have Thanksgiving come around and find us with nothing much to say but, "Well, thank goodness, there isn't much more left of this ding-busted year."

Since the World War the mental age of Americans has risen from 12 to 17 years.—Statistic. Some one should tell this to the magazine ad writers.

Letters to the Editor

Recovery.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A recent editorial in one of the leading New York papers quotes Postmaster General Farley as saying: "The unpardonable sin of any Administration is failure." And the editorial comment states: "If recovery fails, Roosevelt fails."

Such assurance is by no means warranted. Donald Richberg, who is revealing himself more and more as a person of sanity and moderation, places the responsibility elsewhere. Speaking before the Merchant's Association of the City of New York a little more than a year ago, he said:

If this adventure should fail, it would not be a failure of Government; it would be a failure of an industrial system, which the industrial act seeks to improve in order that its values may be preserved. It will mean either that the system is fundamentally unsound, or that the present managers of private industry are incapable of operating it successfully.

It would be well if business in this country would accept that challenge. In the end it will have to. President Roosevelt is the best friend that business based upon the capitalistic system could have. He is giving it the chance of its life to recover in the only way in which the American people will accept recovery: that is, recovery based upon social justice and the absorption of the unemployed. If the socalled captains of industry bring about recovery on those terms, well and good. If they can not, there is plenty of mental caliber in the Administration to see that it is done.

ALICE CARPENTER.
Boston, Mass., Nov. 24.

A Courageous Man.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is it possible that Washington is finally getting around to a solution of the traffic problem, based on restoring the streets to traffic, instead of allowing them to be preempted as free storage garages? If so, this will indeed be a radical departure from our traditional policy, which heretofore has consisted of continuous slaughter of shade trees and widening of streets at taxpayers' expense, the resultant space thus made available being promptly filled up with stationary automobiles.

Traffic Director Van Duzer is a courageous man to suggest that Washington may finally have to adopt measures that every other city worthy of the name adopted long ago. I can anticipate the storm of indignation that the Street Sitters will pour upon his head.

PERMANENT RESIDENT.
Washington, Nov. 23.

Quite Friendly.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Sir Wilmott Lewis, correspondent of the London Times, in his recent address before the Board of Trade, gave some views on the possibility of a greater Anglo-American alliance and friendship.

Undoubtedly, England is for England, and, after ten centuries, knows the subtleties needed by a country to hold its own. They are giving nothing to the United States. Few better illustrations have appeared showing why they laugh at us, if they do, than Sir Wilmott unconsciously provided. His ease in handling himself before his listeners and the flawless delivery of his excellent diction would have shown up most good American speakers.

The English outwardly criticize us and yet inwardly may be proud that English offsprings largely have developed, somewhat in a crude way, so far, the world's greatest source of opportunity. The writer has noticed that when a son quits a father in business and, going out for himself, gives the father a beating in competition, the parent yells murder—but likes it just the same.

Also, usually, you can not get far in saying things against a man when talking to his cousin, which suggests a greater chance for friendship with England than with others.

EDWARD G. SCHARF.
Washington, Nov. 24.

Carnivorous Tendencies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A so-called bard wrote what appeared to him to be a humorous poem signed "Carnivorous" in reply to my letter against the Thanksgiving gluttony and ferocity. He jokingly accuses me of "inconsistency" because, in complaining about the real cruelty to truly sentient fellow-creatures, I show no sympathy for onions and tomatoes and similar "weak brothers."

The attitude of some cannibals, who, tired of meat-eating of human flesh, could not distinguish between the eating of human flesh and the eating of goats, etc., was far more consistent than the attitude of carnivorous critics who can not distinguish between tomatoes and turkeys. Turkeys, goats, swine and human beings all belong to the animal kingdom and cruelty to them is all of the same type because it causes suffering to beings in possession of a nervous system, enabling them to feel fear and pain. On the other hand, plants, though living and wonderful, are not cursed with nerves such as cause the animal creation to groan in pain. No harm can be done to unconscious life, such as plant life.

Carnivorous tendencies among the natural and legitimate carnivora, who, moreover, inflict far less suffering on their prey and never kill so wantonly, are no excuse for human gluttony and cruelty.

MARIE GUNDERSEN.
Brookmont, Md., Nov. 25.

Brains vs. Vision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When it is recalled how long and completely the Democratic Party was submerged, its pronouncements of doom and finis to the Republican Party, at least, affords amusement.

The Democratic Party came into power when its nominee included the Progressive Independent's platform, thereby getting their needed support. That the Independents have been steadily mounting in strength did not escape the political eye of the Democratic presidential nominee, but now that the Republicans are awake to the same fact, and will beyond doube proceed toward uniting its factions—then what will happen?

In the meantime, the old guards must have recognized the need for Mr. Hoover to be silenced until his administration has had time to cool off, for Mr. Mills' presidential ambitions to be side tracked and for their chairman to be a real and not an affected compromise. While they may have lacked political vision, they have never wanted for brains.

AN OBSERVER.
Paris, Tex., Nov. 24.

Poets Must Eat (?).

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am very happy to see some people in open defense of the poets and in sympathy with their undertaking to do something tangible and practical to advance their art.

In reply to the Reformed Versifier permit me to say in defense of those of us whom he sought to belittle:

What narrow sight, what ignorance is this
When people think a poet's life must miss
All earthly bliss and toil in attics cold,
Half-fed, ill-clothed, and yet rare beauty mould?
Lord Byron wrote: "The Prisoner Of Chillon"
(A morbid thing to feed one's soul upon)
And Oscar Wilde wrote: "Reading Gaol" while bars
Hid from his gaze the beauty of the stars.

How better far are poems that elevate
A suffering soul to some ethereal state?
Could Ovid pen "Epistles" in a cell
And if Tagore were poor could he write well?
Could Riley write: "That Old Sweetheart of Mine"
Or Dante do "The Comedy Divine,"
Had hunger stalked the threshold of their door
And shaped its shadow on their cold bare floor?

I sincerely hope that this subject may be of interest not only to versifiers, rhymsters and poets, but to the general public and our city fathers and that something may be done about it.

EARL A. CUEVAS.
Washington.

Mary and Doug.

They say of the profession of journalism that it takes starry-eyed young people and makes sour cynics of them, but this would be hard to prove by their treatment of the autumn romance of Mary and Doug. So gracious has been the press in its handling of the issue between America's sweetheart-emeritus and Douglas—Douglas, tender and true—that it might in fact be accused of going soft.

At Kansas City, last week, Mary told the boys that she and Doug are happily reconciled, and added that she had just finished the writing of a 60,000-word serial with the swell box-office title, "Demi-Widow." At Chicago, Mary would neither affirm nor deny the reconciliation, but was sure she had just completed the manuscript of a novel, "Demi-Widow." In New York, Sunday, Mary flatly denied the mending of the marital rift, but affirmed that she had written a novel named "Demi-Widow." It would seem that Mary has written a novel.

It is all just a big coincidence that the reconciliation situation changes from hour to hour while Mary is readying a novel for the press and Doug is releasing his new film, "Don Juan," for the Christmas trade. And being gentlemen, the boys of the press would not attempt to make it seem otherwise. Sweet are the uses of publicity, of course, but what has publicity to do with a woman's natural indecision in love or her satisfaction in having completed a first novel? Meanwhile, the press can only consult her from time to time on the progress of the reconciliation. It is true that Mary once wrote another treatise, "Why Not Try God?" but in these cases it is the custom to interview the lady first.

The Post Impressionist

Guilty Parties

Post Office, Tuesday.

MURDER rarely ranks among the little vices this column is inclined to coddle.

So we are shocked by a communication which seems to imply that we commended a sensational assassination in Washington. So, also, we hasten to publish the letter and explain our recent reflections upon the long-ago killing of United States District Attorney Philip Barton Key by Congressman Daniel E. Sickles.

We believe that Sickles was guilty of one grave offense. We believe that the American public was not innocent of another.

Let's recall the episode:

An anonymous letter writer communicated with Sickles, accusing Mrs. Sickles of infidelity and linking her name with Key's. The wife confessed. Sickles shot Key, was tried—acquitted. All this happened in 1859.

In 1934, E. H. Bierstadt recalls it in his book, "Enter Murderers," and, speaking of the interval between Sickles' arrest and acquittal, says:

"Little else was talked of . . . Sickles' cell was knee-deep in flowers. Notables flocked to see him and congratulate him . . . Sickles was almost literally the idol of the Nation."

Scarcely was the book published than the Post-Impressionist commented on its version of the Sickles case and made this point, of which Mr. Bierstadt had missed the sweet significance:

"That sort of mob-hysteria has been experienced in America before, will probably happen again. But, six months after the trial, the unbelievable occured: The praises turned to reproaches because Sickles forgave and brought back his wife! The country shook with a torrent of condemnation. 'I am not aware of any code of morals,' said Sickles, 'which makes it infamous to forgive a woman.' No use! To kill the lover was heroic; to pardon the wife was unpardonable."

Now, over the signature of "J. W. F. H.," a correspondent writes us from Alexandria:

"You speak of Sickles being the idol of the Nation after the cowardly murder of an unarmed man. He was ostracized by the citizens of Washington—and, to make matters worse, he condoned the offense by taking his wife back again.

"My father was one of the gentlemen who helped to carry Mr. Key in the club, which is now the Metropolitan Club (where he died). Mr. Key was an accomplished and talented gentleman and was held in the highest esteem by the bar and the citizens of Washington."

Well, here are two conflicts: A conflict as to facts and a conflict as to opinions.

As to facts, we take refuge behind Mr. Bierstadt.

Was the murder merely cowardly?

Mr. Bierstadt says that, although Key had this time forgotten his revolver, he usually went armed. Mr. Bierstadt says that when Sickles accosted Key, the latter made a movement of the hand toward his revolver's habitual resting place. And Mr. Bierstadt says that the verdict of the jury (presumably 12 good Washingtonians and true) was one of murder, not through cowardice, but because of unsound mind.

We fear that these differences J. W. F. H. and Mr. Bierstadt will have to argue out between them.

Was Sickles ostracized?

Since J. W. F. H. says Washingtonians ostracized Sickles, Washingtonians undoubtedly did. But Mr. Bierstadt says that the accused man's "cell was knee-deep in flowers," that "notables flocked" to see him, and that he "was almost literally the idol of the Nation."

We can suggest only that Mr. Bierstadt was speaking of Sickles' fellow Congressmen and other non-Washingtonians.

However, we take all the responsibility for our statement that the popular reactions to the trial (we mean the reactions outside of Washington) were a perfect example of mob-folly. We believe they were unreasoning in their adulation of Sickles before he was tried for his murder. We believe they were worse than unreasoning after he had forgiven his wife.

Of course, we condemn murder. Since one gray morning when we saw a murderer hanged, we have had occasional qualms about capital punishment, no matter how much we may affirm it in principle. But we also condemn the condemnation of the murderer who—late though he was about it—pardoned that woman whose actions had, however improperly, moved him to crime.

* * *

We could give you quotations from high sources to the contrary—but we won't.

Anyhow, the opinion isn't J. W. F. H.'s and doesn't seem to be Mr. Bierstadt's. For, oddly enough, at this point—which they reach from a wide disagreement—these two controversialists join hands. Mr. Bierstadt thinks Sickles was a bit too sententious in his mercy. J. W. F. H. appears to think that forgiveness constitutes condonation.

So many men, so many minds!

Spirit of Armistice Is Waning Gradually

Will November 11 Mean Anything to New Generation? Paris Observer Asks.

By Andre Vulliet,
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

Paris.

GLORIOUS, medalled and beflagged, an army of ghosts the other day was walking up the Champs Elysees. Blind, armless, crippled veterans, respectable and often forgotten, were making for the Arc de Triomphe in silent procession. It was Armistice Day and those who remember the World War in their flesh rekindled the symbolic flame that burns endlessly over the tomb of the unknown soldier. Their presence under the great arch, amidst the constant flow of life and traffic, was a moving testimony of those tragic hours.

With more or less dignity, with fear or hatred, one minute on November 11 was one of those rare moments when people all over the world had the same thought: war and death. Yet, when all the survivors of the last war are dead—and provided, of course, a new conflict does not start in the meantime—will Armistice Day still mean anything to the new generations?

They are growing up in an atmosphere which both the press and events are helping to draw further and further away from the Armistice spirit. The word "armistice" has regained its real meaning of "cessation of hostilities pending further developments." To many, the anniversary of November, 1918, is as senseless a ceremony as would be the celebration of an intermission between two acts, the war of yesterday and that of tomorrow. Eduard Benes, Czechoslovak foreign minister and possessor of one of the clearest European minds, recently expressed the belief that 1935 would be a decisive year for the fate of Europe.

All the late events have been pretty nerve wrecking. The facts that the people concerned have kept remarkably cool-headed, that no shattering outbreak has materialized, can be put down as reassuring signs. They show a better anticipation than in 1914 of what the consequences of a conflict would be, and a greater apprehension of it on the part of the majority of the people.

* * * *

GERMANY'S rearmament and a ghastly feeling of insecurity, long regarded as French manias, seem to have become front-page news in many other countries. In their present state of uneasiness, the French find that this change of attitude is at least one consolation. But they show the sort of bitterness of those who say: "I told you!"

After the Senate arms inquiry, in Washington, which "revealed" large arms shipments to Germany, the British, in turn, are getting quite anxious over the same subject. In fact, with the exception of Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express, all the British press plays up Germany's rearmaments and emphasize the risks of a German air invasion. "Hitler Rearms," a best-seller, full of information and data, was written by an English girl.

Britain's official spokesmen, in the last few months, have also changed to no lesser extent. Baldwin has put the British frontier on the Rhine, Lord Hailsham, British war minister, recently declared that the British army would not be good until it was strong enough to repel a foe on the Rhine.

* * * *

EVEN MacDonald, speaking at the London Lord Mayor's banquet, a few days ago, expressed such ideas as these: "In conjunction with France and Italy, every threatening outburst of angry emotion has found us counseling steady control and putting forth every influence we possess for peaceful conditions.

"Our experience has proved that, in the present state of mind of the world, disarmament by example is not an effective way to reduce arms or to increase international confidence and so strengthen peace."

"The existence of the League of Nations imposes certain responsibilities upon us. * * * These obligations will be fulfilled. Were they not, the risk of war would be greatly increased."

It is not altogether without humor that the same papers which for years have accused France of being blinded by her desire for security should now be campaigning incessantly for a peerless air defense for Great Britain. Security, too, seems to be one of those things that begin at home.

* * * *

RELIGION and militarism seem to be the two powerful frameworks on which German civilization is built.

At the beginning of Hitler's rise, his troops showed every intention of swallowing up the Reichswehr, which now embodies all the great militaristic traditions of prewar Germany. But there are reasons to believe that, in his conflict with the century-old Prussianism, the one who had to come around was Hitler.

The same thing is likely to happen again as Der Fuehrer is now struggling against the most dangerous stumbling block governments of all times ever found in their way.

Some 400 years ago, in 1517, when Martin Luther reformed the Catholic religion, his new principles established a strong connection between the State and what is now known as the German Evangelical Church. But Hitler wanted more than a mere connection between State and religion and tried to have all religious matters under his direct control.

Dr. Mueller, a former military chaplain, was made "the" reichsbishop and local bishops were appointed to replace the superintendents who existed before the war, when the German emperor was the head bishop of Germany. So-called "German Christians" started out to force racial principles into the German Evangelical Church.

* * * *

THIS met with violent opposition from a synod which gathered in November, 1933, at Wittemberg, the town where Luther first came out with his new principles. Since then opposition has never ceased. Lately, it seemed the protesting church was getting the upper hand and Hitler was willing to get out of a thorny position. One of his men, Dr. Jaeger, legal director of the church, was forced to resign. But Dr. Mueller is still in office and his relations with the Evangelical Church are as strained as ever.

Whether this resistance of German Protestants will eventually become the nucleus of a political resistance it is impossible to say. But if such an opposition should take a political form, it does not seem likely that it will be to foster more liberal principles. One should not forget that German Protestantism is strongly nationalistic. Luther linked forever the Bible and the sword.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

White House Turkey.

The turkey strutted in the yard
As happy as could be;
It seemed a very gallant bird
Without timidity.

It didn't know a single fear—
The world seemed bright and gay;
"I'm quite a bird," the turkey said,
"And everything's okay."

Abundant was its share of food,
Its appetite was great,
And it would eat the whole day long
And never hesitate.

The finest corn was fed the bird;
Much great and tender care
Was lavished on it night and day—
It more than had its share.

It grew to be a super turk
And knew no hardship but
A difficulty breathing
When it overdid its strut.

Its feathers had a lustrous gleam,
It radiated health;
As turkeys count their worldly goods,
It was a bird of wealth.

One morn the farmer grabbed the turk
And whispered merrily,
"You're going to the White House now
In Washington, D. C.!"

"From turkey farm to White House!—What
A trip for any bird!"
Exclaimed our feathered hero with
His eyes a little blurred.

The ax then flashed above his head—
He saw it and drew taut. . . .
The journey to the Capital
Would not be what he thought!

He watched the axe gleam in the air. . . .
The blow he soon would feel—
"So this," the turk said bitterly,
"IS ROOSEVELT'S NEW DEAL!"

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The First Time

THE White House, to use that rather vague term, was reported yesterday to be just about as indignant as it could be over the reception given to the so-called joint statement of Messrs. Harold Ickes and Jimmy Moffett denying there was any friction between them and intimating that the whole business was just a sinister plot on the part of those seeking to embarrass the more abundant life. There was no justification for the indignation, but it can easily be understood that the White House experienced an unusual emotion of some kind. It was fully entitled to an emotion of surprise.

BARGERON

It is the first time in this Administration that the unusually cordial relations between the White House and the newspaper boys struck such a sharp discord. It is the first serious jar in what has appeared to be a perfect meeting of minds. The boys, generally speaking, seem to have agreed that the more abundant life is a pretty good thing and to have reached a perfect understanding about it with Mr. Roosevelt. With them in this mood it has been very easy for the White House to explain away disturbances, frictions and other matters which, under other Administrations, would have made most interesting reading.

* * * *

In this instance, however, virtually every newspaper dealing with the Moffett-Ickes story wrote that it was a very serious clash. When the White House issued the so-called joint statement they pointed out that the White House issued it and said, furthermore, that the conflict still prevailed. In other words they paid no attention to the White House statement and wrote the facts. This is rather amazing and may well have caused a serious emotion of some kind on the part of the White House. It is so contrary to what has been the practice.

What the boys were supposed to do when the White House statement was issued, of course, was to say there had been a general misunderstanding on their part, or if there had been a clash between Mr. Ickes and Mr. Moffett that the conciliating Mr. Roosevelt had brought them together and that this was just another example of how his persuasiveness smoothed over conflicts in his official family.

Instead, they were pretty much of one accord in saying, in effect, that the joint statement was the bunk. Maybe, coming on the heels of the Tupelo, Miss., dose it was simply too hard to swallow.

* * * *

The plain truth is that instead of ironing out anything in this instance Mr. Roosevelt is now facing one of his biggest problems in Mr. Ickes. Something has got to be thought up in the next few weeks to keep him in his place in the sun. He is not the retiring kind. He is said to have aspired, at first, only to be the Indian commissioner. But nothing like that would suffice for him now. The three billion dollar public works fund placed him in a spotlight which he doesn't intend to let go. We have got to find some way in which he can spend three billion more, either on express highways from here to the Pacific Coast, on housing projects, or something. It is a thing that has got to be done, that's all.

It is an embarrassment for Mr. Roosevelt because the original public work fund has turned out to be such a flop. Had success attended it there would be no trouble in finding something else for Mr. Ickes to spend money on but you can imagine how difficult it is to find projects for more spending when he hasn't been able to spend but a little more than half of the original fund and a lot of that went to Secretary Swanson's navy and the NRA and other Federal projects.

But it is a problem which we may as well bend to and solve. The office of secretary of Interior has no appeal now for Mr. Ickes. He never refers to it and most of us have forgotten he has that job. Another three billion for him to administer is essential—to him.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

I TRUST it has not eluded the notice of my faithful readers—"both of them," in our Mr. Bargeron's wistful phrase — that these informal little notes are based on a gathering of books on a single topic. That is, I pile the books up daily under some such theme as light novels, travel, biography, and so on. All very well and good, thinks your columnist, until bit by bit there accumulates at the end of the shelf a somewhat dismaying array of books with the most obstinate disinclination to center on a topic.

* * * *

A duck decoy is a scarred chunk of painted wood which red-faced hunters toss out into the bay from their blind among the rushes. Or it is an item of Americana, as collectible as a cigar-store Indian. Or it is a bit of genuine handcraft, made by an innate artist, with all the "significant form" which Clive Bell admires and all the fine line attested by centuries of Chinese painters.

All these aspects of a common object raised into a magnificent hobby appear in Joel Barber's magnum opus: "Wild Fowl Decoys" (Windward House, $6). Mr. Barber, a New York architect, has collected decoys since 1919, now knows more about them than perhaps any other man in the country. His collection numbers about 200, from the crudest of barrel-hoop decoys for the sand-hill crane to the finest of craftsmanship in a varnished and painted Canadian goose.

Here are tales of Mr. Barber's collecting jaunts up and down the coast. Here are 120 splendid illustrations—many in color—of finished decoys and of plans for carving them. Altogether, here is the alpha and omega of a hobby par excellence, presented with such contagious enthusiasm that I, at least, who haven't thought twice about decoys in the last six years, now itch for a block of white pine and a draw-knife to copy this stunning model of a black duck in plate 118. Here is a noble book for both gunners and stay-at-homes.

With slang in 20 distinct categories from college ("collitchians and coednas") to radio, with a vast collection of general slang, with over 15,000 slang terms classified and indexed, Prof. Maurice H. Weseen's "Dictionary of American Slang" (Crowell, $2.50) is the ablest and most complete glossary we have of our "slanguage."

As Carl Sandburg said: "Slang is language that takes off its coat, spits on its hands, and goes to work." By that very token, you can gain a better idea of America from this highly interesting and amusing dictionary—grand reading by itself—than you can in any "great American novel" I've seen.

And let no one tell you that slang doesn't have a head on its shoulders. There's no sharper definition of the art of writing, of the plaguing choosiness which is its very core, than this one slang word—"Whichcraft."

As brain-teasers, try your hand at defining these words—Glocke, goguette, goi, gora, Gorgio, gospodin, grazie, and groente.

You would have to be a polyglot of the first order to get them right, or possessed of C. O. Sylvester Mawson's invaluable "Dictionary of Foreign Terms" (Crowell, $2). For here this learned lexicographer has gathered some 11,000 foreign words and phrases, from 56 languages, and translated and explained them. Proverbs and phrases, slang and cookery terms come out plain for the reader who is likely to be stumped by them in many a book and magazine these days. One of the first uses for this book which comes to mind is an understanding, at last, of Mr. Mencken by those who have no German.

To show you Dr. Mawson's range, here are the translations of those puzzlers up above—German for bell; French for singing society; Yiddish for a Gentile; Hindustani for a white man; Romany for a non-Gypsy; Russian for Sir or Mr.; Italian for thanks, and Dutch for vegetable.

* * * *

By table and graph, by census and statistics, George A. Lundberg, Mirra Komarovsky and Mary Alice McInerny went through Westchester County from top to bottom to find out just what people do with their spare time. "Leisure: A Suburban Study" (Columbia U. Press, $3) is the result, an admirable, solid research into intangibles. We learn that of all workers, housewives have the most leisure hours (but don't try to prove this to your wife); that eating heads the list of leisure pursuits, followed by visiting, reading, entertainment, sports, radio, motoring and clubs; that 95 per cent of the high school boys had their best times away from home, and 83 per cent of the girls.

But the collectors of this data have spirit of their own. This is what they think of the current notion that leisure should be spent in using up more manufactured products—"Herein we have the modern version of the fascinating experience of growing more corn to feed more hogs, to make more money, to buy more land, to grow more corn, to feed more hogs, and so on. This exhilarating round, at an ever increasing tempo, represents, apparently, the highest aspiration of Western civilization."

"Cher Ami," by Marion B. Clothren (Little Brown, $1.25) is the romantic story of a famous war veteran carrier pigeon, now stuffed and on view in a glass case at our National Museum.

* * * *

I'd like to thank heartily a number of readers, from Alexandria to Schenectady, who've taken the trouble to correct a positively unique notion of this wayward typewriter on Monday last, to the effect that Dostoevsky wrote "Anna Karenina."

Until someone comes along like the scholar who said that Homer wasn't written by Homer, but by another man of the same name, credit for "Anna Karenina" still belongs to Count Leo Tolstoy.

Liquor Probers Call 11 More Witnesses

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.). Eleven Franklin County residents, most of them from the mountainous section, appeared before the Federal grand jury today to tell what they know about the alleged conspiracy to violate the national revenue laws by illicit whisky transactions. This was the eleventh day for the probe. The grand jury will recess for Thanksgiving Wednesday.

It was said some of those who testified today either had been engaged in moonshining operations or were familiar with the activities. None of them remained any length of time in the grand jury room and it was assumed their evidence was largely of corroborative nature.

Tremendous Poem

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

WE can call November, 1934, the one-thousandth anniversary of his birth, if we feel like it, for the exact year of his birth is not known. Yet it is known that he was born about 1,000 years ago (934-941 A. D.), so let us have a mild celebration, in harmony with the occasion. When a man is remembered by the world 1,000 years after his birth, the fact itself is so unusual as to be worth commemorating.

Firdusi or Firdausi or Firdousi (it is difficult to misspell his name) was a Persian poet, author of a great epic called "The Book of Kings," which gives the history of Persia. He was born at Shadab in Persia, somewhere near or in the year 934. His father was a wealthy aristocrat with large estates, and the boy was brought up in a manner befitting his social station. He was highly educated and knew the ancient form of his native language, in which the records of the remote past were entombed.

* * * *

His gigantic poem immediately became the national epic and has been just that ever since. Persia has a glorious and romantic history, "in the dark backward and abysm of time," and there are many exciting incidents which appear here and there in the long poem. One of the most impressive of these episodes is the story of "Sohrab and Rustum," out of which Matthew Arnold created one of the best narrative poems in the English language. It is seldom, I think, that Matthew Arnold stirs our emotions very deeply; his appeal both in verse and prose is more to our intelligence. But I have never been able to read "Sohrab and Rustum" without a lump in my throat.

Firdusi's tremendous poem first became available to foreign readers in the nineteenth century; and indeed until 1900 it remained in manuscript. The French government paid to have it translated into French in magnificent folio volumes; it took 37 years to do this, the work being completed in 1868. Then followed cheaper editions in French and other modern languages.

* * * *

I have no doubt that most of my readers who have read anything at all of this poem have read it where I read it myself. The indefatigable Helen Zimmern many years ago made a condensation and paraphrase of Firdusi in one volume called "The Epic of Kings." The illustrations were by Alma-Tadema.

If Helen Zimmern lives till 1936 she will be 90 years old. She has given to the world an enormous amount of valuable and useful information and has been throughout her long life a fruitful and inspiring influence.

Poultry Show At Smithsburg

500 Fowls Entered in Only Winter Event Planned for Maryland.

Smithsburg, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—More than 500 fowls are to be entered for the sixth annual exhibition of the Smithsburg Poultry Association, which will be held in the high school gymnasium and auditorium December 5, 6 and 7.

This is the only winter poultry show planned in Maryland this year, and because of this fact, Harold A. Remsberg, Middletown, president of the association, stated various cooperating agencies will provide events of unusual interest to all engaged directly or indirectly in the poultry industry.

A new feature of this year's exhibition will be the annual State 4-H Club poultry judging contest, which will be held on the closing day. E. C. Jenkins, of the University of Maryland Extension Service, and State 4-H Club leader; Prof. W. H. Rice, poultry specialist of the extension service, and Mylo S. Downey, assistant agent of Washington County, will be in charge of the contest. Boys from all sections of the State are expected to participate.

The Maryland Barred Rock Club and the Maryland Brown Leghorn Club also will hold their annual meetings in connection with the show. O. C. Boileau, Middletown, has been named superintendent for the former meet, and John W. Hamsher, State vice president, superintendent for the latter.

Judges named are C. N. Myers, Hanover, Pa.; L. F. Teter, Hughesville, Pa.; H. R. Rudy, Hagerstown; Boileau Bros., Middletown, and W. H. Rice, College Park.

Officers of the association are Harold A. Remsberg, president; Bernard P. Kretsinger, secretary-treasurer; R. Kenneth Frey, assistant secretary-treasurer; committee chairmen, Rexford B. Hartle, Marshall Kline, John M. Hamsher, O. C. Boileau and Donald Phetteplace.

Roosevelt Can Beat Bonus on Principle

To Let Issue Be Diverted to Question of Cash Would Be Fatal Policy.

By Elliott Thurston.

UNDOUBTEDLY President Roosevelt can beat the bonus if he sticks to his guns. But if, as appears to be intimated from the drift of conferences at Warm Springs, he permits himself to be drawn away from the basic principles he has previously asserted in opposing it, and allows the case against the bonus to rest merely on the question of raising the necessary money, there is every reason to believe that he is lost.

For as never before Congress will not be disposed to vote down the bonus for lack of funds to pay it. A greenback-minded Congress will hardly hesitate to suggest paying the estimated $2,500,000,000 outlay in greenbacks if it comes down simply to a question of finding a form of currency in which to make payment. Or if greenbackism is objected to, Congress can easily enough turn to the magical profits derived from reducing the gold content of the dollar.

A Congress none too pleased over having gold profit hoarded into a secrecy-shrouded fund at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury for purposes which are wholly mystifying to most members can not be expected to keep hands off that tempting source of supply, if the only question is one of where the cash is coming from.

It occurred to the bonus advocates last winter to use either the gold profit or what were euphemistically described as noninterest bearing United States notes to pay off the bonus. The since-defeated Senator Robinson of Indiana, who was perhaps the most frenzied bonusite, proposed to make the payment with the gold profits. Representative Patman of Texas, who would yield nothing to Robinson or anybody else when it comes to turning the Treasury inside-out for a supposedly potent bloc of voters, proposed to use the greenbacks. Neither of these passionate patrons of preferment succeeded last winter, but only because Mr. Roosevelt stood his ground, objecting that the bonus was wrong as a matter of principle.

* * * *

IN dedicating the veterans' hospital at Roanoke last October, Mr. Roosevelt restated the fundamental objections to the payment of the bonus at this time. He emphasized that the first duty of the Government was to care for "the disabled, the sick, the destitute and the starving," and he gave two additional reasons why it is unfair for the veterans to ask for still more special privileges now.

"The first," he said, "is that our Federal Government and our State governments have given to them many privileges not accorded to other citizens and the other reason is that it has been amply demonstrated that the veterans of the World War, today in the prime life, are better off from the point of view of employment and of annual income than the average of any other great group of our citizens."

It is true that the bonus deserves to be beaten as an unsound, uneconomic drain upon an already overburdened budget and because it would be a deadly blow to normal recovery. But the primary objection, as Mr. Roosevelt said in his veto of the independent offices bill last winter, "is not based solely on the consideration of dollars and cents." "You and I," he reminded Congress, "are concerned with the principles herein enunciated."

THAT the bonus can be defeated this winter seems evident from a survey of the new Senate. Not only is the Senate more than ever under Mr. Roosevelt's command, by reason of the last election, but on the basis of the votes last winter against the bonus there are many more than enough to sustain his veto if it comes to that. Eliminating all Senators who switched their votes on this issue as ten of them did, and counting only those Senators who were in the Senate last winter and voted consistently against the bonus, there are still 49 votes against. This does not allow for newly elected Senators who, like Minton of Indiana, are committed against the bonus.

In other words, there will be at least 50 votes against the bonus in the incoming Senate, on the basis of the record. Even if some of those who stood up stoutly against it before should weaken, there would still be an ample number to sustain a veto. Only 33 votes are necessary to sustain—to prevent a Presidential veto from being overriden. It is wholly unlikely that Mr. Roosevelt, with his enhanced party power and prestige, will not be able to command this minimum of 33 votes in the Senate on this, as well as on almost every other important issue, especially when he stands on sound principle.

Clearly he can stand on principle, as he has before, in opposing the bonus. As he has previously said, it is not a mere matter of dollars and cents.

Record Price Bid for Bonds

117.029 Is Offered for a $100,000 Issue by Cumberland.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 26 (AP).—The highest price—117.029—ever to be offered for a local bond issue was received today by the City of Cumberland for financing sewerage projects.

The bid for $100,000 of general improvement 5 per cent bonds, was made by W. W. Lanahan & Co. of Baltimore. It was also the highest of the five blocks of the $850,000 issues authorized in 1920.

The previous blocks have sold for 94.11, 96.729, 107.13 and 111.681.

There were three other bidders, Phelps Fenn & Co. of New York, 116.770; Baker Watts & Co. of Baltimore, 114.287; Alexander Brown & Co. of Baltimore, 109.681.

Dealers reported that all of today's allotment of the 1920 issue were sold immediately after the bids were announced. The proceeds were for financing the Green street conduit project and the interceptor sewer project.

Live-Wire Accident Recounted in Court

Carroll County Man Seeks $50,000 Damages.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.). Suit for $50,000 damage, brought by Dorry R. Zepp, former truck farmer of Carroll County, against the Potomac Edison Co., began in the circuit court before a jury today with Judge Arthur D. Willard presiding.

Zepp alleges that while walking along a road he came in contact with a live electrical transmission wire from a fallen pole and was severely burned, resulting in the amputation of his arm and part of his left foot.

The company contends the accident occurred on a private road leading to the Taneytown fair grounds and that Zepp was using the road to trespass on the fair grounds.

Eastman Plan For Shipping Control Flayed

U. S. Regulation Will Kill Inland Waterways, Session Is Told.

St. Louis, Nov. 26 (AP).—Control of shipping by the Interstate Commerce Commission, long advocated by Federal Transportation Coordinator Joseph B. Eastman, "will kill inland waterways," the Mississippi Valley Association was told by its president today.

Eastman's plan, reiterated by him at today's opening session of the sixteenth annual meeting of the association, brought immediate opposition from Robert Isham Randolph, Chicago, association president, and other speakers.

In opening his address Eastman said: "The thesis which I am going to undertake to defend here is Federal regulation of all important forms of transportation, including water carriers and their port-to-port rates, by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Randolph in his reply said:

"We believe that the shipper and the ultimate consumer are entitled to the free and unrestriced use of the public highways and the transportation of goods at the lowest cost commensurate with the character of the service."

Earlier in the day an alternative to the Interstate Commerce Commission plan was offered by Maj. Gen. T. Q. Ashburn, president of the Inland Waterways Corporation. He advocated the "creation of a cabinet position to be known as the secretary, of transportation," for the control of shipping.

In a speech tonight Secretary of War George H. Dern said that slow development of inland waterways had penalized the entire country and that cheap transportation was as important to the Nation as cheap power.

More than 500 delegates from Mississippi Valley States are attending the convention, which will close tomorrow, probably in the heat of a controversy over the association's stand on the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty. In convention last year the association declared its opposition to the pact because of an asserted insufficient water diversion from Lake Michigan at Chicago.

U. S. Departments Given Half-Holiday

Many Employes to Receive Time Off Tomorrow.

The Departments of Commerce, Justice and the Treasury late yesterday granted a Thanksgiving half-holiday to their employes for tomorrow.

The Navy Department will release as many employes as possible at 1 p. m. tomorrow. The half-holiday is under consideration by the State and Labor Departments, and it was understood that the Agriculture Department may yet reverse its tentative decision to keep employes full time.

Postoffice officials awaited the return of Postmaster General Farley before announcing their decision.

The District Commissioners are expected to grant a similar half-holiday if a majority of the Government Departments take action.

Civic Groups Invited To Aid Welfare Work

Cooperation of 32 civic and business and professional organizations was asked yesterday by Elwood Street, director of public welfare.

Members of the groups were invited to take an active share in District relief and welfare work as volunteer workers and each organization was offered one or more speakers who would, if desired, outline details of the relief and welfare work.

The proposed volunteer service, Mr. Street said, "by able, intelligent and mature people, is greatly needed."

Ballou Asks Board To Snub Veterans

Urges Refusal of Auditorium for Bonus Rally.

Refusal by the school board to permit the use of Central High School Auditorium the night of December 7 for a veterans' bonus rally was recommended yesterday by Superintendent of Schools F. W. Ballou.

Dr. Ballou's recommendation was made on the grounds that the meeting "might cause acrimonious discussion." A school board ruling, cited by Dr. Ballou, reads as follows:

"The board may grant the use of public school buildings and grounds to responsible organizations for civic, educational and social activities,

"Such use will be granted under the regulations designed to guard from uses tending to create unrest and acrimonious discussion in the community, and from uses contrary to the spirit of our American institutions."

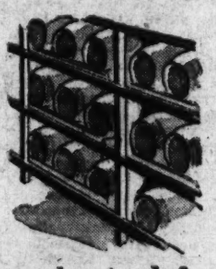
Thousands of cobwebby barrels, locked in our bonded warehouses, waited, as other barrels have waited during the past 124 years, for that day when the amber clear fragrant liquor they contained would reach "bonding age."

Four years, says the U. S. government, is the time a whiskey must wait and mellow and ripen before it can win that official seal of approval, the federal bottled-in-bond stamp.

And now, the time has come!



That famous old Pennsylvania rye with the proud signature of A. Overholt upon it—distilled with the same patient skill which has made it known and prized for more than a century—has now reached full bonding age.

There isn't much more we need say than that, is there? Except that alert dealers will be able to supply you this long-awaited treat, wherever distinguished whiskies are offered for sale.

Last Survivor Of War Is Dead In Alexandria

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 933.

Edgar Warfield, sr., 92, distinguished Confederate veteran, and the last survivor of more than 700 Alexandrians who marched out on May 24, 1861, to join their command at Manassas, died last night in the Alexandria Hospital, after a brief illness. He was a brigadier general of the United Confederate Veterans, and head of the Virginia division of that body.

Gen. Warfield was born in Washington, June 7, 1842, when Alexandria was a part of the District. He was the son of Abel Davis and Sarah Addison Warfield, both of whom were natives of Maryland, and came to Alexandria in his early youth. At the outbreak of the War Between the States, he was a clerk in the drug store of Tyler Cluverius, father of the present Admiral Watt Tyler Cluverius. He enlisted as a private in the Old Dominion Rifles, a unit of the Seventeenth Virginia Regiment, and served throughout the four years of the war.

Twenty years after the close of the war, Mr. Warfield was one of the organizers of R. E. Lee Camp, Confederate Veterans, which, at one time, had 229 members on its rolls. He was adjutant of the camp and, at the annual banquets of the camp, which have been held for many years, his part in the ceremonies was the reading of Gen. Lee's farewell address to his soldiers at Appomattox. He was several times commander of the camp, and always a prominent figure in celebrations in which the Confederate veterans participated. One of the chief pleasures of his later years was attending meetings of the national encampment, and of the State body.

Mr. Warfield's most highly treasured document was the parole issued him at Appomattox, signed by the commander of his regiment.

At the close of the war, Mr. Warfield formed a partnership with a comrade, William Hall, in the drug business, and this partnership continued until the retirement of Mr. Hall. His son, Edgar Warfield, jr., is also in the drug business, and since the closing of his own store the elder Warfield has kept in touch with his profession by filling prescriptions in the son's store. Recently he was acclaimed the oldest active druggist in the United States.

Surviving are two sons, Edgar Warfield, jr., and George E. Warfield, and two grandsons, Ashby and Courtland Warfield, all of Alexandria. His wife, who died many years ago, was Miss Catherine Virginia Batcheller, of Alexandria. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Wheat Farming Relief Figured

More than $1,000,000 has been paid Maryland farmers who cooperated in the Government's wheat adjustment program, it was announced yesterday by the University of Maryland Extension Service.

The Extension Service placed the amount received by the farmers, up to November 19, at $1,155,828.35. Of this amount, $547,785.40 was paid in the first 1933 installment, $157,127.13 in the second 1933 installment, and $450,915.82 in the 1934 installment.

The Extension Service also placed the amount paid the farmers in connection with the corn and hog adjustment program, up to November 14, at $220,001.

Payments on these contracts are being made as rapidly as compliance can be checked, officials declared.

Plans for the corn-hog adjustment program for the coming year call for a somewhat smaller reduction in hogs than was provided in the contracts this year, and for much greater latitude in the use of land taken out of corn production.

assume office until January 9, and because Gov. Ritchie is making an investigation, I would consider it bad taste to attempt to inject myself into the State roads matter of overdrafts and inability to pay its bills.

"Throughout the campagn I iterated and reiterated my belief that extravagance and waste in this department and other departments existed and could only be revealed by a rigid investigation, which I promised to inaugurate. I am confident that I was elected mainly upon the promise of an investigation, not only of the State's road commission, but of the banking situation, the office of the automobile commissioner and every State department.

"I shall, as I have often stated, ask the Legislature authority to appoint a commission for a complete audit of the State's finances and a real investigation of its every department.

Foresees No Objections.

"I conceive this to be a mandate from the people, not only to myself but to every member of the Legislature, and I expect no objection by the Legislature in granting my request for authority to make such an investigation. The investigation will be fair, impartial, without political significance, but thorough and without interference through influence, political or otherwise.

"No one is seeking to cause trouble for any one, but my reaction to the temper of the people as I discovered it through the campaign is to the effect that they will brook no interference in the discovery of the real situation as it exists in the State departments.

"If inefficiency, waste, and extravagance shall be discovered to have existed, then again will the money be spent wisely, because it will cause elimination of these things and furnish us information upon which we may base corrective measures, guaranteeing against the recurrence."

200 Strike at School Over 2 Expulsions

Utica, N. Y., Nov. 26 (AP).—Two hundred pupils at the West Winfield Central High School went "on strike" this morning in protest against the expulsion of two classmates.

The pupils' spokesmen said the two were forbidden to attend social functions of the school for having walked upon the institution's lawn, that they went to the senior dance on Saturday night, and, in consequence, were expelled.

pert with hot cars. After Berlin came in, the others strolled in. They were just to do whatever was necessary.

"I went up to the guy who had the money bag (Charles R. Streets, cashier) and told him to reach for the sky. I had to tell him three times. But he reached. I made him lie down on the floor along with some other guy who was there. Berlin had some others cowered. I took the money bag, ran to the car, threw it in and jumped in after I saw no one was chasing us.

"I rode in the car five blocks and got out. The rest of them went on to Dunn's home in Baltimore, and when I got there they had counted out the money. I got about $200.

Misunas Cross-Examined.

Misunas was cross-examined by Attorneys James A. O'Shea, Michael Lane and others. He repeated his testimony of how the gang decided to rob the brewery and how he led in making the arrangements.

He denied he was getting any concessions from the Government as a result of his testimony, though he did admit he had entered a plea of guilty to the Richmond killing. He was not questioned about his story that he had turned against his one-time pals because he was convinced some of them had "squealed" against him and had led police to his hideout in California.

Two employes of the Heurich Brewery identified Berlin as one of the gang that rushed into the main office and left with the day's receipts.

Mrs. Elizabeth Fontaine, who was shot and seriously wounded near Darby, Pa., several months ago because she allegedly knew too much about the gang's operations, and who was whisked away to her Canadian home after she had testified in Richmond, may be the surprise Government witness, it was intimated. She, according to the Government prosecutors, may be called upon if the case reaches the point where testimony corroborating that of Misunas is needed.

Since the escape of Mais and Legenza she has been kept under close guard.

Blow on Head Fatal to Wells, Autopsy Finds

a preliminary autopsy on Wells, which indicated that his death was from natural causes, last night, in conjunction with Dr. Oscar B. Hunter, Washington pathologist, concluded that Wells died from a blow, possibly struck by brass knuckles.

A small rectangular dent in Wells' skull, by the left temple, led to this announcement.

Earlier in the day, Albert Anderson, of the Prince Georges County police, at Hyattsville, placed a charge of carrying concealed weapons against Thomas (Slim) Richardson, 28, of Capitol Heights, arrested in connection with the case.

State's Attorney Alan Bowie ordered a further investigation into Wells' death after the doctors' decision.

The ordinance states:

"Every establishment which conducts or manages any place wherein alcoholic beverages, beer or wines are dispensed or sold or used, irrespective of the nature of the business conducted therein, shall be closed for purposes of business, each and every morning at 1 a. m. and shall not reopen for business of any sort until 7 a. m. the same morning, excepting Sundays, when they shall not open until 9 a. m. Violations shall be punished by fine of from $5 to $50, and jail sentences of from 1 to 30 days."

A resolution was adopted ordering the town clerk to write the county liquor board asking that all licensed places be closed at 1 a. m. on weekdays and at midnight Saturdays.

Other Ordinance.

Another ordinance taxing all special dances, not conducted in regular dancing establishments, at $10 a year, was passed. The funds received from this tax will be used to buy uniforms for the Capitol Heights policemen, it was explained.

A further resolution urged that the police force be increased from eight men to 12. It was tabled for future discussion.

In defending Capitol Heights, J. W. Beavers, a citizen, stated at the heated session, "Carloads of people from Washington come here and start the rough stuff that gives our town a black eye."

A coroner's jury, headed by Magistrate Oscar Poore, who is acting coroner of the town, was selected to go to Marlboro, Md., and view the body of Wells.

Washingtonians Fined.

Magistrate Poore yesterday disposed of the five arrests of Washington men made in Capitol Heights as follows: Aldo and Jack Pieri, brothers, of 237 K street northeast, who pleaded guilty to charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, were each fined $32. Mitchell Burch, Washington, who pleaded not guilty to charges of interfering with an officer, was tried, found guilty and fined $13.50. Nick Romano, pleading not guilty to charges of disorderly conduct and assault, was tried and fined $8.50 on the former charge and was set free on $100 bond, to be tried a week from Thursday, on the latter. Matthew Rowell, pleading not guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct, was fined $8.50.

"Three empty seats in any schoolroom may furnish us with something tangible," he said.

From farthest corners of the rural region today came automobiles of every description, bearing farmers eager to see the three little bodies.

The curious and those who thought they might recognize the children came from all parts of the State and from across its borders.

Bodies to Be Moved.

All were admitted, even wide-eyed school children, as investigators clung to a theory the little victims may have been from this vicinity.

But the bodies soon will be shut off from the public gaze. Police said they will have to be removed to a more complete morgue, possibly in Harrisburg.

Masks are being prepared to record the impressions of the three white faces thousands have looked upon since Saturday night. The masks will become part of the record of the case and arrangements will be made for an immediate funeral.

A puzzle book, distributed by an oil company, was scrutinized for clews today. The book was in the small black bag found Thursday near the spot where the bodies were uncovered. A childish hand had scrawled "Norma" on one page.

2 Agents Accused In Tax Conspiracy

the beer racket who were wanted on income tax charges when I came into the Treasury," he said. "Internal revenue agents have done excellent work."

All the income tax cases handled by the two dismissed Internal Revenue Bureau employes are being thoroughly investigated, the Secretary said, to determine whether any previous incidents of defrauding the Government or the taxpayers have occurred.

Morgenthau declined to reveal how much money was involved in the tax case but said it would run ito "several hundred thousand dollars."

The New York firm of accountants, which worked with the Government employes, will be barred from future practice before the Treasury, he said. The Secretary declined to predict whether the tax consultants will be prosecuted.

"The business man who tipped us off on this case was a good citizen," he observed. "And I invite any other business man in the country to cooperate with us if approached in a similar way."

Would Defraud Gullible.

Investigators at the Internal Revenue Bureau explained the conspiracy as one to defraud the gullible taxpayer rather than the Government. The two Government employes had advance information on the outcome of tax appeals, it was said, and would convey the information before it became public to the tax consultants.

The consultants would then approach the taxpayer involved and promise to obtain the ruling already decided upon, if the case were turned over to them on a substantial commission basis.

The fee, it is alleged by the Government investigators, was then split among the several persons who had a hand in the conspiracy to the expense of the taxpayer.

Rest Sought Here By Mrs. Vanderbilt

mother had the best right to her child, she smiled and said, "Naturally I agree with them."

Wanted Nurse Dismissed.

On all questions concerning other participants in the case, with the exception of the nurse, Mrs. Vanderbilt had one unvarying answer:

"I have no comment to make."

Of the nurse she said:

"I thought I had a right to insist on her dismissal but apparently I have not."

Gloria's mother denied that she had come to Washington with the thought of appealing to President or Mrs. Roosevelt.

"There is nothing at all to that," she said.

She said that when and if she gets Gloria she intends to live in this country.

Planned to Aid Children.

She came back to this country, she said, with the idea of establishing a small home for underprivileged children and had a committee chosen for her project.

But the anxiety of ten weeks of litigation over custody of her child, she said, caused a temporary dropping of the plan.

With her as she talked was her sister, Mrs. Benjamin Thaw.

Justice Carewe, in New York, said Mrs. Vanderbilt's lawyer wished some of the testimony withheld, but Mrs. Vanderbilt said last night she was quite willing for the entire case to be made public.

Mrs. Vanderbilt said she would return to New York on Friday for the next legal move in the case.

"I know what a dis-armament conference is," Willie the Office Boy says. "A dis-armament conference is when delegates get together and argue about what country will get dis part of de armament and what nation will get dat part."

Well, perhaps that isn't quite true, but if you want a better definition we suggest that you consult Franklyn Waltman, jr., The Washington Post's authority on foreign news. He will tell you all about the things happening in France, or Russia, or those Fascist countries where life is dictated but not Red. Each Sunday, he writes a complete resume of the week's foreign news, and after you've read his review of the latest European intrigues you'll know why Hitler wants his army back again, and why France is worried about the franc, and why England keeps on muddling through.

Mr. Waltman is also an authority on Maryland affairs, from terrapin soup to the legislative snarls in Annapolis. When the politicians there want to know what the voters are thinking about in Hagerstown, Salisbury or Elkton, they come a-running to him, for he knows more about Maryland politics than Hank Mencken does about Baltimore beer. We still think that if Gov. Ritchie had read him more carefully, he'd still be laying corner stones and signing bills or whatever it is that a Maryland governor does.

You see, Franklyn Waltman, jr., who is one of the brightest of The Post's bright young men, was awarded the Pugsley Prize for the best Washington correspondence of the year while he was with the Baltimore Sun, and he is considered one of the best reporters in American journalism. He not only gives you the facts of the story, but also the facts behind the facts, and his articles are written in an intelligent, informative style.

If you're interested in Maryland affairs . . . if you're interested in world affairs . . . or if you're interested in brilliant reporting, we advise you to hunt up Franklyn Waltman's by-line in The Post each morning. Then, whether the argument between bridge hands is about Nice's victory on November 6, or Mussolini's plan to equip all the Italian baby-buggies with machine guns and armor plate in case of war, you'll be able to have the Final Word by quoting what Waltman says about the matter . . . for after his clear, accurate, thoughtful interpretations, no further explanation is needed. You'll find his articles each morning in

Capital Debs To Make Bow At 'German'

Baltimore Event Monday Will Introduce 70 From East.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Probably the four most outstanding dates in a girl's life are the day of her birth, the day of her engagement, the day of her marriage and the day of her debut. And at this season, debutantes take precedence over almost everything else. Next Monday night more than 70 young girls from several Eastern cities will appear at the Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore where they will make their bow to society at the first "german" of the season in the old Lyric Opera House.

These debutantes will make their entrance into the world of pleasure as did the grandmothers of many of them on a similar occasion. A debutante is supposed to be a jeune fille, hitherto restricted in her social activities, and unacquainted with the more advanced forms of entertainment. As a matter of fact, many of the debutantes of today are more sophisticated than their elders, and equally well acquainted with formal entertaining. However, the Baltimore german will equal, if not eclipse, anything they have known in the way of charming and formal functions, carrying on the traditions of many years.

Two Balls Given Each Season.

The board of governors of the german generally gives two balls each eason, one in December and one in January, and each girl must be invited by a member of the cotillion, and approved by the board of governors before she receives her formal invitation.

The old Lyric Opera House is entirely transformed, for these occasions, into a vast ballroom, with gold brocade hangings and cloth of gold cushions scattered about on the carpeted staircase leading to the stage. Gold candelabra, which are used only at these functions, are brought out of the vaults where they are stored for the rest of the year after the balls. They are placed artistically in the theater.

A traditional decorative feature of the ball is the festooning of the boxes with smilax, and each debutante has her flowers sent to her box to be placed against the background of greenery. A latticed pergola covered with smilax and roses forms a background for the supper tables on the immense stage.

Older Members Received First.

As the guests enter they present their cards of admission to two attendants who wear the same pillbox hats of black satin and the same style maroon jackets and trousers that other doormen have worn since the great-grandmothers of some of Monday's debutantes made their bow.

The older members of society are received first and ushered to their boxes; and later the wives of the members of the board of managers take their places at the entrance to the ballroom to receive the debutantes who are requested to appear promptly at 11:45 o'clock.

This year Mr. and Mrs. John Phillip Hill, who always keep their Baltimore home open during the season, even though they pass the winters in Washington, will entertain at a dinner for their daughter, Miss Suzanne Hill, a debutante of last season. Her guests will be a number of this year's debutantes who are being presented at the cotillion that same evening. They include Miss Christine Long, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Rome, and Mrs. Breckinridge Long; Miss Marianna Dunn, daughter of the Chief of Protocol Division of the State Department, and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, and Miss Stellita Stapleton, daughter of Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton. Other Washington debutantes who will be presented at the cotillion are Miss Ruth Sowers, daughter of Mrs. William F. M. Sowers, and Miss Bambie McKenna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royal T. McKenna.

Miss Peggy Nolley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Tolar Nolley, of Richmond, Va., who passed the last two winters in the Capital, where she has many friends, will make her bow to Richmond society on December 9, after having been presented to Baltimore society at the cotillion Monday night.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

The other evening was really lots of fun. Several of us went out to The Club to dine and dance. Later, fearing that we were fast becoming "landlubbers"—a few tireless souls set out for the ship down in the harbor, which has aroused our curiosity.

It is a nice little vessel and is quite novel and entertaining . . . but dancing on a sloping—really sloping—floor is indeed a feat. Jack Nicoll, after sitting and watching Kay Pearson and Al Friendly, Kathleen Talley and Charles Koester go gliding down hill—whirl and then maneuver back up the incline, took to the old sailing ways and with comparative ease, danced criss-cross—the length of the room—tacking, to use the proper word.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Richard Crane, young advertising man, sails for Paris on borrowed money to join his beautiful wife, Jocelyn. As dependent guest of the fashionable Oliver Keenes, she has innocently become involved in intrigue. She has lost half a pearl necklace loaned her by Mary Derby, in love with Dick. When Mary cables for the necklace, intending to sell it and save Dick's failing business, Jocelyn in a panic has sent back a fine copy.

She expects to replace the artificial pearls with money earned posing for Ogden Temple, multimillionaire whose love she fears.

Dick insists on the truth about the pearls. Jocelyn fears to tell him she is posing for Temple and begs for one night without problems. The following morning she leaves Dick still asleep and goes to Temple's chateau for her last pose. Temple gives her $2,000 which she has earned.

Rita Keene, in her scheming jealousy, brings Dick to the chateau, forcing her way into the studio where Jocelyn is about to part from Temple.

SADLY JOCELYN shook her head. "No," she said. "It's been very wonderful. But I told you once, and I tell you again—I care more for Dick than for anyone in the whole wide world. Don't ever wait for me, my dear——"

With a great gentleness, Temple took the globe from her hand, laid it on the dais at her feet. Her fingers were icy cold.

"A last glass of Amontillado?" And he smiled.

The lovely glasses glowed in the sun against the rich gold of the mantle.

"To forever——" he said.

"To—never—" Jocelyn answered, and the glass was at her lips when she heard a voice outside that door usually hushed and protected from any intrusion.

Temple started, his face thickening to red. "I gave orders," he began furiously, when the door opened.

Jocelyn's fingers stiffened, snapping the frail stem of her glass.

It was Rita's voice, high and fluent in French—"Mme. Crane is expecting me, I tell you." And the door flew open. "My dear, do forgive me, but Mr. Crane was too impatient! He simply forced me to bring him here——" Rita stood quivering like an exotic black-and-white butterfly in the doorway.

Behind her rose gray shoulders and a white, set face.

With a sense of fatality Jocelyn moved slowly forward. One was always punished—always punished in the end—even for mistakes!

"This is a most unexpected intrusion, Mrs. Keene," he said harshly.

Behind him, Jocelyn seemed already turned to marble, folded in her golden mantle of Faith, a crown of stars on the rich chestnut brown of her hair. Rita had brought Dick here before she had had a chance to explain, and now he would never believe her!

Rita's futile voice trailed away as Jocelyn moved forward. "Mr. Temple, this is my husband," she said. "Dick, this was my last seance with Mr. Temple and I couldn't disappoint him." But there was no useless appeal in her voice.

Dick's voice was like a blade. "Will you take off that costume, Lynn, and get into your things?"

Invited to Lunch.

Temple turned his imperious blue gaze from one to the other. "Surely there is no hurry," he said courteously enough. "Your wife told me you had arrived. Now that you are here——" His shaggy brows lowered in Rita's direction—"I hope you will stay for lunch."

Dick, white to the lips, answered—"I've come for my wife, Mr. Temple. Perhaps you're aware that I never would have consented to her posing for you."

"It had not occurred to me." Arrogance, like a scar, twisted the heavy brow and lip.

Jocelyn went quickly up to Dick, so tall and braced against her. "Please remember," she said in a low voice, "that all this is my doing. I offered to pose. I meant today to tell you. We mustn't bring our private affairs into Mr. Temple's home, Dick."

Sincere Admiration.

"Mr. Temple and I understand each other," Dick said curtly. He stood straight, long limbed, his profile clear as a coin against the bare white spaces of wall.

Dick strode over to Jocelyn. "I'll give you exactly five minutes to get into your clothes," he said, and his voice shook with passion. "As for you, Temple——" his shoulders swung about. "Since my wife tells me she offered to come here, I can hardly knock you down, as I should like to do."

Helplessly Jocelyn glanced at Temple. Across his brow flittered a shadow of melancholy. "Your wife is a very wonderful woman, Mr. Crane," he said gravely. "You are fortunate in having her entire love and loyalty. May we leave it at that?"

But Dick's young face did not relax. "I don't need you to tell me about my wife," he said, coldly.

Temple had walked to the window, bulked against the light. And through the June air so sweet with his roses and box, threaded the notes of his violins—his orchestra playing Bach — hidden by the hedges, as it had done for Jocelyn every morning she posed.

"If that music doesn't tell you what I can't—then you'll never know, Dick," Jocelyn whispered to him, and was gone into the dressing room.

Her hands shook as she shed the tissue mantle, the flowers, fruits—the crown of stars. No use. To Dick the whole atmosphere, the music, would only seem theatrical. Yet suppose she asked him to give up Mary Derby—the sort of thing he could understand. Would he?

In her bag were the $2,000 she had taken from Temple for Mary. They burned, a fire she might never be able to put out.

Dick and Jocelyn were silent as they drove back to the hotel with Rita, but when they reached their room, and were alone, there was no further putting off that which they had to say.

Jocelyn Explained.

Slowly Jocelyn took from her bag the flat packet of bills Temple had given her. "Before you ask me anything," she said, "this is two thousand dollars to buy pearls. I earned it by the posing you so violently objected to." With a gesture of weariness, she halted his movement of rejection. "You're not going to fling—the price of my folly—on the floor, or anything equally silly," she said, thrusting the bills back into her bag. "I was worth that and more to Temple." Her lovely brown eyes looked at him fearlessly. "I'm as sick of lies and hiding things as you are," she went on. "I earned this money by posing—and only by posing."

Dick's hands twitched in his pockets, and the bitter little lines around his lips that had never been there before, deepened. "There will be no pearls—or anything else—bought with that money," he said evenly. "It goes back. Lynn, can't you understand how I feel? I let you go because I thought I couldn't weather the summer. I never told you," he said bitterly, "what a jam I was in. Still am in——"

Her Story Told.

Jocelyn's face was still turned from him. "Why didn't you send for me, then, instead of coming over?"

"I thought you might be in trouble, and a cable would worry you all the more." His fair hair tumbled above his frown. "I told you why Mary wanted her necklace. To sell and put the money as a partner in my business. To save me from bankruptcy," he said fiercely. "How do you suppose I'm going to explain to her that you deliberately sent back imitations?"

"I lost her pearls," Jocelyn answered, "and I'll tell you how. They were torn from my throat in a disgraceful fight. I was trying to get some compromising letters Prince Glazanoff had written to Rita, away from one of Ollie's blonde playmates who had stolen them—the one you saw him with last night. Pretty story, isn't it? Then I met Ogden Temple. Or rather, I met him on the Ile de France, coming over," Jocelyn went on. "I have only one thing to add and then you'll have the truth. I think he's one of the most wonderful people I've ever met. And, in his way, he loves me."

Love Was Wrecked.

Dick gripped her by the wrist, swung her around. "And you love him?" His young face, beaked and savage, thrust out at her.

Jocelyn didn't move. Her heart seemed sheathed in ice. "Do you love Mary Derby?"

With a sudden violent movement Dick let go and flung away from her. "So we've come to this!"

"We've come to not believing in each other," Jocelyn said. "You wanted to spare me money troubles, and I wanted to spare you the sort of things you wouldn't understand."

"You mean your smart friends and your love affairs," Dick sneered.

"I agree with you for thinking the worst of them." Jocelyn's voice remained low, even. But inside another voice was crying, "You're breaking precious things. Wrecking—killing all you love. Why? Why?"

Dick was back at her. "You're in love with Temple. Why not admit it?"

Jocelyn looked at him sadly. "You wouldn't believe me if I told you my feeling for him."

"He's made love to you?'

She nodded. "Yes.'

"That's enough," he said shortly.

She watched him walk to a bureau drawer, drag out his valise, tumble his things into it.

"I happen to love you, Dick," she heard herself saying.

And So He Left.

"Don't talk to me of love again. I'm sailing tomorrow. If you want a divorce, you can have it." In the windy dark behind his bleak gray eyes, he seemed to stand alone, his head bowed.

They stood on opposite brinks of emptiness, staring at each other. It was Jocelyn who whirled, flying to him. "Dick, oh, my darling—this is madness," she cried. "We can't let any one, anything do this to us. I love you and you know it. I don't want a divorce."

"Will you let me send that money back to Temple?" he asked her somberly.

Jocelyn's arms half rose, then fell limply again on her sides. "Do you trust me so little that for the sake of your vanity—yes, your vanity," she repeated, "you can stake our life together on a gesture?"

"We'd both better think this over, Lynn," he said. "I'm going to find a room somewhere. When I know where it is, I'll telephone you. I'll give you up to the moment my boat train leaves tomorrow to decide." His voice broke as he said—"I was so sure you'd be coming back with me that I have your ticket—our stateroom——" There was a moment's pause, then with a grim set to his chin he added: "My last word is—either that money goes back, or I'm through!"

The door clicked open. A second he was framed there, tall and young and stone-hard. Inexorable. The door shut.

New Cause Found For Word Blindness

Word-blindness, the inability to see and remember words and letters in their ordinary order, is sometimes caused by forcing naturally left-handed children to work with the right hand. This fact was discovered by the Harvard Graduate School of Education in the course of research directed by Dr. Walter F. Dearborn.

The research tends to do away with the old theory that word-blindness is caused by congenital weaknesses in controlling centers of the brain.

"It appears that in order to avoid difficulties in reading and writing, one should either be left-eyed and left-handed or right-eyed and right-handed," said Dr. Dearborn to the United Press recently. He added that the latter condition was preferable.

Typical of word-blind readings are "saw" for "was," "top" for "got" and "broad" for "board."

Experts Urge Milk as Part Of Luncheon

Suggestions to Increase Meal's Nourishment Offered.

SOMEBODY must always think about the food value of a lunch carried from home, whether its for a school child or a business worker. It is easy enough to put sandwiches together with meat or cheese filling, but other important foods are likely to be left out of this sort of lunch. What else might advantageously be included?

If you can count upon a bottle of milk at the school or obtainable near the office, that question is easier. Even if you must squeeze each penny, says the Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, you can probably better afford to pay for that bottle of milk than to have the person who carries the lunch do without it. It will make up for many shortcomings in a sandwich lunch, more than any other food you could provide. But when the lunch includes a sliced meat sandwich, or an egg or cheese sandwich, put in also a vegetable sandwich, or a ripe tomato, if you can. Or a fruit of some sort.

1. Chop hard-cooked eggs, and mix with minced crisp fried bacon and enough salad dressing to moisten.

2. Wash prunes, dates, raisins, or dried figs or apricots, chop fine, mix with about twice as much cottage cheese, add salt to season, and chopped nuts if liked.

3. Use smoked cooked fish or canned fish, flaked, with lettuce or cress.

4. Mix cottage cheese with chow-chow, chili sauce, or chopped dill pickle, green pepper, watercress, onion, or other salad vegetable, or with grated canned pineapple or chopped nuts, adding salt to season.

5. Grind shelled roasted peanuts medium fine, mix with enough cream or salad dressing and add salt to season. This is particularly good as a filling for graham or whole-wheat bread.

6. Spread slices of brown bread with a mixture made of one-half cup of cold Boston bake beans, and 2 tablespoons chili sauce or catsup.

7. Heat dried beef in melted butter in a skillet until the beef curls at the edges. Use with lettuce or cress.

Style Changes Hurt Chinese Lace Industry

Decrease in Demand and Competition From U. S. Cause Slump.

SHANGHAI—Styles in clothing seldom change in China, but the livelihood of hundreds of thousands of Chinese depends on the whims of Dame Fashion in Europe and America.

One of China's most important "family" industries, the lace-making industry, is extremely sensitive to changes of styles in Paris and New York.

If Parisian fashion "dictators" decree less laciness in feminine attire, the result in China is likely to be that thousands of women are thrown out of work.

For the last several years, the lace-making industry has been in a slump and lace exporters here attribute the industry's decline partially to the reduced demand for laces for women's wear. But there have been other causes.

U. S. Competition Is Factor.

For one thing, the competition of American machine-made lace has had a telling effect on the Chinese industry. Assisted by a 75 per cent tariff against Chinese-made laces, the American looms have been able to take much of the business that was formerly China's.

As a consequence, the export of Chinese laces to the United States, which a decade ago was a thriving business, has dropped off to an unimportant figure. Production in China has been greatly curtailed and stocks increase as exporters hopefully await an upturn in the American demand.

Imitate European Types.

Because of the let-down in the European lace industry at the beginning of the World War, the demand for Chinese laces for some years exceeded the supply. The industry reached its peak seven or eight years ago.

Nearly all Chinese-made laces are imitations of European types. The filet lace, introduced from Italy, has been the most popular. This lace is made chiefly around Shanghai and Wusih, in Kiangsu Province, and at Swaton, in the south. Swatow-made "Irish" crochet lace also has had a heavy sale in the United States in past years, and has run serious competition with the product of Irish lace makers.

The embroidery-making industry in China has gone through much the same difficulties as the lace makers.

Jewel-Hued Frocks Come Into Favor

CHICAGO, Nov. 26 (AP).—The "jewel velveteen" dresses—really jewels for practicability—are coming into their own.

They are frocks that take their colors from the red of garnets, the blue of sapphires, the green of emeralds and are trimmed with imitation jewel clips and buttons.

One of the season's smartest materials, velveteen has been fashioned into dresses that can go to town, to bridge games or answer the need for a semi-sports frock.

With its thick, short, smooth nap, velveteen is especially rich looking in the colorful jewel hues. In the purple of a deep-toned amethyst, a velveteen frock has a regal look, and there is color warmth in a velveteen dress in the red of garnets or rubies.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF NOVEMBER 27 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p. m. and from 6:45 to 8:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:45 to 9:45 a. m., from 12:45 to 2:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m.

On this November 27 you may be subjected to a very unreasonable demand. By keeping your temper and offering a logical reason for the difficulty you might find to comply with it, the person making it is likely to be made to see the light of reason. Constructive plans made on this date for business transactions will probably prove fruitful earlier than anticipated. Be careful not to condemn as not up to the standard something you may purchase, upon a superficial inspection, for this might turn out to be a mistake after a thorough examination is made.

If invited out you will display good judgment to abide strictly by the laws prescribed by conventionality, both in dress as well as deportment, as a stickler for both is likely to be among those present. Married and engaged couples, as well as those matrimonially inclined, will make a brighter day of this if they will express there sentimental claims by deeds instead of only of words. The bestowal of some little attention of a personal nature might be greatly appreciated.

If a woman and November 27 is your birthday, your mental and physical alertness should develop into marvelous assets, for through them your capability may gain recognition that might lead to gratifying financial results. Outdoor sports will be beneficial for one of your nature. Domestic science, social welfare, educational and literary work all offer exceptionally good opportunity, if taken up seriously and enthusiastically.

As a wife you should prove marvelously successful. It might be best, however, that you have a home of your own, so you can regulate it according to your own ideas.

The child born on November 27, generally when it reaches school age, is capable of more than holding its own in both schoolroom and sports. Regular hours for meals and bedtime are desirable for this child's physical development.

If a man and November 27 is your natal day, you will be wise to remember exercise in moderation is a very good thing, but if overdone can prove harmful. Your nervous energy might be used to better advantage if you do not let it tempt your undertaking too many things at the same time. If you learn to conserve it there may be no limitations as to the results to be secured.

Successful people born on November 27:

Henry A. Rowland, physicist.
Cornelius Vanderbilt, financier.
Robert R. Livingstone, stateman.

Frocks Show Peasant And Cossack Influence

Peasant and cossack influences are felt increasingly in dresses. Daytime dresses are showing the soft easy bloused lines gained by shirrings and panel sections. Coats are showing a cossack flair and the Russian belt is everywhere in evidence.

Faucet Device Assures Soft Water in Home

By Ruth Anne Davis.

A VOTE of thanks goes to the originator of the unique device which fastens to your faucet and converts hard water to soft. For years people have wanted a practical and inexpensive way to overcome the difficulties of hard water. Their doctors have told them it was not the best for drinking; beauticians have warned them against it; their laundry bills have mounted because of it; and housework has been twice the drudgery it should be, all because hard water refuses to lather freely and simply will not clean so readily as water freed from tiny particles of insoluble minerals.

Hitherto the only means for actually changing hard water to soft has been almost prohibitively priced. Large firms, hotels, and hospitals could afford to install plants, but housewives were in most cases still compelled to wrestle with the ordinary faucet water.

Now at a local firm conveniently located to the shopping district they may see for themselves what wonders a small household soft-water device performs.

If they decide to take these devices home and try them they will see how quickly the soap bills are cut in half, how much longer hands stay soft and youthful looking, how much more satisfactory laundry results are, and how just a whisk of soft water brightens china and glasses.

Incidentally, a group of nationally known cooking experts have said that green vegetables cook tenderer, have more flavor, and are more digestible when soft water is used. Actual experiments have shown that tea and coffee go one-third further.

Artificial Curves.

Since the boyish figure is no longer the toast of stylists, and slight curves are again the order of the day, it behooves the woman with a flat chest to become a shade buxom. Those who have tried exercises for this purpose find that the results are too long forthcoming, and negligible even then. For quick results they turn to bust pads such as those displayed in a local store.

These are made of pleated net stiffened sufficiently to give graceful, natural looking curves under a dress. Unlike other contrivances which serve the same purpose, these are modestly priced at 89 cents a set.

Library First Aid.

Six small practical volumes will prove a valuable addition to any library. The first one of the 2-inch books contains paper clips, the second, gummed reinforcements; the third, gummed labels; the fourth, transparent mending tape; the fifth, thumb tacks, and the sixth, index tabs.

A set of this type goes a long way in keeping a library in top notch condition. If you return some evening to find that the dog has too avidly perused a volume and has practically devoured its contents you can set to work with the proper tools to mend the damage at once. Or if you yourself inadvertently tear a page, you have transparent tape on hand.

Balbriggan Pajamas.

Better than blankets or downy comforts for keeping you warm on a wintry evening are the snug lisle balbriggan pajamas on sale in a downtown store.

These keep out the cold drafts that send shivers up and down your spine. They have an advantage over heavy outings, inasmuch as they're light as can be and don't feel suffocatingly close after a few hours under the covers.

They come not only in delicate pastel colors, blue, pink and yellow, but are styled to fit neatly and look attractive. At present they sell for $1.

A Suggestion for Men.

If the man of the family wears a worried look he's apt to be working himself into a frenzy for his dread Christmas shopping. If he can be persuaded to tour the shops now instead of worriedly rushing from store to store on Christmas Eve he should drop by a Connecticut avenue shop and see what suggestions are there.

One item he'll be sure to like is a fitted case made from ecrase—to him compressed leather. It comes in black, green, red, brown, blue, tan and even an alluring orchid. Inside there's a clothes brush, a brush and comb, scissors, mirror, powder box, lotion jars and bottles, shoe horn and nail file. Despite all these, there's still room left for whatever you care to add.

Centerpieces on Display.

Unless the gobbler himself is going to grace the center of your Thanksgiving table, you'll look far and find no centerpieces more attractive than those on display in a local shop.

These consist of fishskin flowers, single, large blossoms or clusters of small ones artistically arranged on a mirror reflector. You may buy them in yellow, rose, pink, orchid, cream or white—or a combination of colors.

When you compare prices you'll be amazed to find these are considerably less than identical sets which appeared some time ago.

Building Up a Situation.

The bidding of the master player sometimes seems absolutely insane to the average on-looker. I do not mean the bidding on most hands, but the bidding which happens every now and then. There is nothing the expert enjoys so much as to try, by making certain bids, to build up a situation and thus practically direct the subsequent bids of his opponents. This fancy bidding occurs particularly in match point duplicate games when a player is willing to gamble for a top score. Even if his gamble goes wrong he can get only one bottom.

On today's hand, for instance, South, who was one of the nation's ranking experts, made an amazing series of bids. He decided that his best chance for a top on the board would be to get the opponents to take a costly sacrifice against a probably unmakable game. Everything worked out the way South wanted it to—the opponents did take the sacrifice—and then Fate in the form of South's partner stepped in and spoiled everything. South had fixed his opponents but he had not counted upon his partner's interference, and instead of a top score South got a bottom. Despite the difficulty of understanding South's amazing bids, I still must criticize North for interfering, as South had bid the hand in such a manner that he should have been allowed to have the final say.

West, Dealer.

The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.).

West	North	East	South
1◇	1♡	Pass (1)	2◇ (2)
Pass	2♡	2♠ (3)	4♡ (4)
4♠ (5)	5♡ (6)	Pass	Pass
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—East is too weak to make a free bid over the intervening overcall.

2—South decides to get fancy and play for a swing. He knows East to be weak and correctly deduces that his partner's overcall is a strong one but that it almost surely is not strong enough to enable North and South to make a game. South decides that he may fool the opponents if by very strong bidding he contracts for a game. The opponents in the meantime may, if taken in by South's strong bidding, decide to sacrifice in either diamonds or some other suit and be penalized. South's first step is to overcall in the opponents' bid suit. North should understand from this bid that South intends to control the bidding from now on.

3—East, having passed the first round, sees no reason why he should not cheaply show his suit at this point and possibly find a good way of out-bidding the opponents.

4—South shoots the works. He is gambling that West's holding will be such that the latter will be unable to double, and will decide to raise spades or bid more diamonds.

5—West falls into South's trap. Completely misled by South's very strong bidding and seeing an absolute maximum of three defensive tricks in his own hand, he decides that four hearts probably can not be beaten and further that four spades will be penalized less than the value of the North-South game.

6—South, who a moment ago reached the height of joy, now tumbles into the depths of despair. North's five-heart bid, in my opinion, is very bad. Admittedly North has a much stronger hand than he has indicated up to now but it is the very strength of his own hand which should have tipped North off to the situation. North should have realized that it was impossible, with both opponents bidding, for South's terrifically strong bids to be legitimate. Either South was being very fancy and doing something very peculiar or South held a hand which was tremendously strong distributionally if played at hearts. If the latter were the case South of course could bid five hearts himself. At any rate North should have passed and let South take whatever action he wished.

Of course South would have doubled four spades and defeated it very badly. Instead, North played five hearts doubled and went down three tricks. South had created a tremendous swing, but North's meddling put the wrong side on the receiving end.

The hand, unusual as it may appear, does teach one sound lesson: permit the hand which has taken control—in this case South—to keep it.

Tomorrow's Hand.

New Architecture Type In U. S. Is Forecast

A new type of architecture will develop in this country as a result of the influence of modern science, Dean Joseph Hudnut, of the School of Architecture of Columbia University, believes.

"It is not likely," Dean Hudnut says, "that we shall return to that complacent mercantilism which finds its expression in eclectic architecture whose perfect flower is a skyscraper masquerading as a cathedral."

Pastry Making Depends Most On Measuring

By Dorothea Duncan.

DELICIOUS pastry depends upon careful measuring and blending of ingredients. This question often confronts the housewife: Can vegetable oil be substituted for a solid fat when making pastry?

Before you decide to make a change in a pastry recipe that you have found to be satisfactory, consider the type of pie crust that it makes, whether it is crumbly or flaky. The latter is more difficult to make, and it is advisable to stick to the general method of mixing for flaky pastry. Sift the flour with the salt, cut in the cold shortening with two knives, and gradually add the ice water.

However, a grainy or crumbly pie crust depends not so much upon the cold ingredients or one method of combining them, as on correct proportions of the materials used. Solid fats or vegetable oils may be used. The fat may be cold and mixed in with the finger tips, or melted and mixed quite thoroughly into the dry ingredients. If the solid fat has been melted or vegetable oil has been used, hot water blends better with the ingredients than cold. This type of pastry should be chilled thoroughly before it is rolled. For crumbly pie crust, pastry flour is better than ordinary bread flour, and if hot water is used the amount of fat should be decreased a little. One-fourth teaspoon of baking powder has a tendency to make the crust more tender. If vegetable oil is used, the proportions will be ½ cup of oil to 2¼ cups of flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder. The fat should be mixed into the dry ingredients with a fork, and less water is required to make the dough cling together.

Readers' Questions Answered.

Following are answers to questions submitted by readers:

What is condiments sauce?

Condiments are articles such as salt, vinegar, spices and herbs and are often combined into sauces and used in combination to season or improve the flavor of various foods.

What is the best way to cook eggplant?

There is no best way to cook eggplant. However, most people consider it a vegetable that can be served fried and no other way. Eggplant lends itself to various methods of preparation and here is a recipe that will prove it.

Stuffed Eggplant.

1 eggplant
2 tablespoons butter.
Salt and pepper
½ cup water
2 cup bread crumbs

Cut the eggplant in half lengthwise and scoop out the center pulp, leaving the rind about one-half inch thick so that the shape will be firm. Cover the shells with cold water. Chop the pulp fine, season it with salt, pepper and butter and cook in a frying pan for 10 minutes, stirring well, then add water and one cup of bread crumbs. Drain the shells, sprinkle the interior of each with salt and pepper and fill them with the mixture. Spread the remaining crumbs over the tops. Place the halves in a baking dish or deep pan and pour enough hot water into the pan to come one-third up the sides of the plant. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees-375 degrees F.) one-half hour and serve hot.

Following are the recipes that have been requested:

Dried Apple Cake.

2 cups dried apples
2 cups molasses
1 cup shortening
1 cup sour milk
2 eggs
4 cups flour
2 teaspoons soda
Spices, as desired

Stew the apples just enough so that they will chop easily and chop them into pieces about as large as raisins. Boil them in molasses until they are like thick preserves, then drain off the molasses. Stir molasses, shortening, sour milk and egg together, add flour, soda and spices, and last of all the apples. This makes two loaves. Bake in a moderate oven (350-375 degrees F.) 45 to 60 minutes.

Baked Stuffed Onions.

6 medium to large onions
½ cup chopped ham or chopped green pepper
½ cup soft bread crumbs
Fine dry bread crumbs
Pepper
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon fat

Remove a slice from the top of each onion and parboil the onions until almost tender. Drain and remove the centers, leaving six little cups. Chop the onion that was scooped out and combine with it the ham and soft bread crumbs. Add seasonings and refill the onion cups. Place them in a baking dish, cover with crumbs, add the milk, and bake in a quick oven (400-450 degrees F.) until tender.

Flying and Riding to Hounds Vary Life Of Better Housing Program Decorator

Display Rooms Show Window Are Her Work

Duties of Mrs. Elmore Include Advice to Loan Seekers.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

PASSERS-BY on H street near Fifteenth have been treated recently to views of a house's interior, visible through the big front window in the Shoreham Building. First there was a jolly recreation room, done in chromium and bright leather. Then, after three weeks, the scene was changed to give the passers-by a generous peep into an inviting study with enormous fireplace.

The interiors are a part of the Washington campaign in the Better Housing Program. The shiny, modern recreation room was planned by Nancy James Elmore. So was the cozy study. In fact, all the rooms to be exhibited in the Better Housing Program's show window will be the work of young Mrs. Elmore, a stunning brunette, who varies interior decorating with flying an airplane and riding to hounds.

The model rooms are only a part of the decorator's job. She also hands out advice on how to transform a pantry into a breakfast nook, on what to use for floor covering in the living room and on what pictures to hang in the nursery.

Advises on Improvements.

Mrs. Elmore's advice is given to those who seek loans from the Better Housing Program to improve their houses.

"Few apartment dwellers come to me," said Mrs. Elmore yesterday in her attractive studio-home at 1612 Twentieth street northwest. "Most of those who want information on decorating are the owners of modest homes. They want to know how they can improve their heating system and how to arrange new lighting fixtures. They want to know how they can do everything as inexpensively as possible. And that's where I come in. It's up to me to tell them how to go about making the improvements after they've settled upon the improvements they can afford.

Mrs. Elmore has no rules for decorating. She likes so-called modernistic furniture. She likes antiques. She likes bare floors. She also likes linoleum, rugs and carpets.

"It all depends on the room," she said. "And on the condition of the floors. Linoleum is grand for a recreation room. For a bedroom, I like rugs, preferably woolly ones. A living room may have anything from a carpet to small rugs, sometimes both."

Old-fashioned lace curtains are coming back, according to Mrs. Elmore. She's rather pleased with the idea. She's strong for Venetian blinds, mirrors, wood-burning fireplaces and candlelight.

Mirrors for Spaciousness.

"There's nothing better than mirrors for giving a room the look of spaciousness," she declared. In her own apartment is a large mirror screen, designed by herself.

Candlelight and a wood fire are an unbeatable combination for producing glamor, according to Mrs. Elmore. But she believes those persons who go rustic to the extent of doing away with electric lights altogether are a little silly.

"Candles are all right to eat by, but they're wretched for reading," she explained.

Furniture for the model rooms in the Better Housing Program's display is borrowed by Mrs. Elmore from Washington stores.

"I've discovered," she said, "that shopping is the most tiring thing in the world. I'd rather sit in a saddle for eight hours at a stretch than spend two hours in a store."

Riding is her greatest enthusiasm. Every morning she piles out of bed at 6 to climb on a horse. She is a member of the Fairfax Hunt Club and is on hand for every meet. Until a couple of years ago she owned her own airplane. Now that she has sold it she doesn't fly much.

Nancy James Elmore is a Washingtonian by birth. When she was 15, she moved with her family to Pittsburgh; attended the college of fine arts at Carnegie Institute of Technology, studied decorating in Paris and then, two years ago, returned to Washington. Until the Better Housing Program got under way about two months ago she carried on her decorating in both New York and Washington.

Underwood & Underwood.

This is Nancy James Elmore who arranges model rooms for the Better Housing Program's display. Mrs. Elmore, a Washingtonian, varies decorating with riding to hounds and flying an airplane.

Prized Art Is Lent For Play Tonight

Fanny Bunand-Sevastos, young French artist, has lent two of her prized paintings for the living-room scene in "44 Below," comedy by Edward DeS. Melcher, which will be presented tonight at Pierce Hall. One of the paintings is a portrait of Mlle. Bunand-Sevastos' aunt, Mme. Antoine Bourdelle. Another is a doorway of an old Georgetown house.

Other paintings have been lent by Mary Foley Benson who has also painted the backdrop for the new piece and has been in charge of interior decoration for the play. Miss Benson is on the art staff of the Department of Agriculture and is one of the few women scientific illustrators employed by the Government.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Discouraged After 11 Years of Marriage to Flirtatious, Close-Fisted, Financially Secretive Man, Woman of 30 Asks What to Do to Reform Him.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Every day I read your column, hoping to find there a problem similar to mine but although there are many interesting cases, and your answers are filled with good hard common sense, I have not been able to apply any of them to my own difficulties.

I am 30 years old, have been married 11 years, and am the mother of two children. The years up until the last three have been filled with tragedy, heartache and humiliation for me, but I have waded through it without any advice, until now I feel I can not go on any longer without a guiding hand. I don't seem to have the energy any more.

* * * *

At 19, I married into a family that was hostile to me from the very beginning. There were two sisters, years older than I, unmarried, who adored their brother. I had not had much training in household matters and none in handling a husband (I was fresh from a convent boarding school) and they did everything to put me in a bad light. My husband was a flirt and the older sister played on this weakness by constantly providing pretty women.

* * * *

I went East to have my first baby and when I returned, there was a widening of the gulf between us that was bridged when the second baby came and we moved East and settled there. My husband still continued his flirtations with all and sundry, even with my own cousin, in a humiliating manner. He even went so far as to tell one of them he would marry her when I died. My third baby was born and died in a terrible accident. This left me weak and so unhappy I was of no use to anyone. Since then my husband has been kinder but he still retains a failing I haven't mentioned: he is very, very close with his money.

* * * *

He has a very fine position with the NRA and from what I hear from others (he doesn't tell me) he makes a very good salary. He gives me $15 a week (his salary calls for income tax) and from this I am to buy food, provide movie and lunch money when I go down town, cold cream and powder. He buys the milk. But he is so crochety about the food, wants the best and withholds the money as though it hurt to give it. He doesn't give it all at once, but some now and some again. How can I influence him to tell me his salary and have him treat me like an intelligent human being, a partner? I get so sick of eternally begging.

* * * *

There is another angle to this, too. In town there is a married relative who, having heard what a flirt (I do not say philanderer, for I do not know) my husband is, has been trying to play on this weakness. She assails him with flattery and while she pretends to be my friend, I notice if there is any slight disagreement between us, his side is taken.

* * * *

If he has to work part of an evening and she knows it, she always makes slurring remarks, hinting that he has been out with other women. I don't believe that. I can usually spar all that, as I have a ready wit. But I do get so tired of it all. There is another cousin, married too, who has heard we are here and is planning to come here to live.

* * * *

My husband has a charm of manner, a gift for making every woman believe he is in love with her. Yet he makes the most disparaging remarks about them after they leave. I don't believe I'd care any more if he would give me my allowance all at one time and not heckle me about it.

* * * *

What can I do, Miss Haworth, to put these women in their place? How can I show my husband what a fool he is making of himself before his children? This woman I spoke of makes remarks, too, because I don't possess, in my home or personally, the fine things my husband's position calls for.

* * * *

If you will try to advise me I shall be most grateful. I feel so weary, so tired of trying to solve it by myself. Sincerely yours,

ALICE D.

Worthless Character.

DEAR ALICE D.: If your husband is so lost to fundamental decency and integrity in human relationships as to keep his wife in the position of beggar for money with which to meet household and personal expenses; and to make her a competitor for his attentions with cheaply flirtatious women, whom he overtly encourages and covertly vilifies, he is a person of such shabby character, essentially, as not to be worth the effort of attempting to make over.

* * * *

If you are primarily concerned with reclaiming and preserving your own self-respect, and promoting your own psychological development to the end of becoming a mature human being, courageously accountable to your own conscience for your eventual destiny, I would say unhesitatingly, leave him.

* * * *

But if you feel you are not qualified to support yourself; that in separating from him you would be jeopardizing the social and economic security of the children, as well as your own; if you are prepared to work out your spiritual and emotional growth along the lines of complete introversion, withdrawing your subjective existence completely apart from that of your husband's; if you think the house divided against itself in all the basic principles of what makes for an enduring married relatedness, can continue to stand indefinitely—or at least until the children are grown—then you may hold it the better part of wisdom to trade pride and integrity, and the chance for normal happiness for the material benefit which you have earned through 11 years of tolerating your husband's humiliating and exoriating shortcomings.

* * * *

Since your husband doesn't see fit to erect a high barrier of dignity, reserve and principle about his marriage or his emotional relationships, there is no defense you can make in its stead, nothing you can do "to put these women in their place." All you can do is retire completely, in person or in spirit, from the situation. M. H.

Monkey Instinct Held Inspiration Of Conventions

It's the monkey instinct for chattering that is responsible for conventions, night clubs, afternoon teas and legislatures, believes Dr. Orestes Caldwell, New York engineer.

"Outstanding traits of the monkey tribe are love of chatter and overwhelming curiosity —traits which have carried our evolution to its present level," said Dr. Caldwell recently.

The monkey instinct is also responsible for man's wide use of the telephone and radio, the engineer added.

Clarinet Is Most Useful Wood-Wind Instrument

Has Wide Range, Great Variety of Tone and Is Easy to Play.

The ninth article in the series on instruments in the orchestra is presented today.

THE CLARINET, like other members of the wood-wind family, goes back to those instruments used by Pan, when nymphs and fauns danced to the gay music of pipes in the woods Since those early woodland days, the pipe has undergone many changes. The mouthpiece was given a double reed for the oboe, the English horn and the bassoons, but in the clarinet only a single reed is used. Much as the clarinet resembles the oboe, it does not taper, and is of equal thinckness until the end, where it flares into a bell. Of all the wood-wind instruments, the clarinet is the most useful because of its wide range, its ease of playing and the great variety of tone.

Clarinets are made in different keys and pitches. The ones in B flat and A are most commonly in use, although some of the scores call for clarinets in C, E flat and D. Occasionally an alto clarinet is employed, and, more frequently, a bass clarinet, which is the largest and deepest pitched instrument of this family. It has a crook for the mouthpiece, and a large bell. It sounds an octave below the B flat clarinet.

The clarinet was the last instrument to enter the classical orchestra. Mozart was the first composer to bring out its chief possibilities.

The clarinet is an integral part of the modern orchestra. Beethoven was very fond of the clarinet. In the Pastoral Symphony it imitates one of the bird calls, while after the thunderstorm it is combined with horns to give the shepherd's call.

The National Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler, will give four children's concerts, sponsored by The Washington Post, on the following schedule: December 3, McKinley High School; December 4, Western; December 7, Eastern, and December 10, Armstrong High School.

Child Chats

Stand Children in Corner When They Display Fit of Temper.

By Alice Fox Pitts.

SOLITUDE is the best antidote for temper.

If the 2-year-old throws himself on the floor and screams when you take away the apples to which he has been helping himself in the pantry, or stop him from playing with the choice china on the tea wagon, stand him in the corner. If the scene occurs in a grocery store, because you have interfered with his plan to throw a display of jelly glasses onto the floor, stand him in a convenient corner then and there.

When an older child flies into a rage because his brothers or sisters won't play parcheesi by his rules, send him to his room until his temper calms. Tell him that this is not punishment; he is simply being banished until he can talk rationally, when you are perfectly willing to arbitrate the situation. Then the decision regarding the family quarrel may be in his favor, but until he regains his composure he will have to stay in his room alone.

Anger and flaring temper are partly a matter of disposition, of course; but they are also a matter of habit. Make a child understand that he must control his temper, help him to do so, and his future is certain to be calmer and happier as a result of that training.

This, of course, will entail curbing your own temper in his presence, for a child's emotional reactions are patterned after your own.

Knitting Fad Provides Work For Hundreds

OUT OF a pioneer art has come new economic opportunity to the women of the United States.

The revival of knitting has opened hundreds of jobs to women capable of serving as instructors in this art. The New York State employment bureau reports increasing demands for experienced knitters. Yarn manufacturers say they are not able to meet the demand for knitters capable of giving instruction to beginners in department stores and shops that retail yarn.

Many of the larger stores in cities are providing instruction in knitting to their yarn customers. Daily women pass hours in these stores giving as much attention to their knitting as they formerly devoted to bridge. The knitting of sweaters and of dresses presents problems that the amateur knitter must take to an experienced instructor. Shaping the necks and inserting the sleeves of garments are the most difficult part of the knitting process.

Many firms are employing women to travel in the interest of the revival of knitting. These representatives hold knitting institutes in the cities they visit.

With thousands of women novices taking up the art of knitting, it is expected that the demand for knitting instructors will continue to grow. The interest of the Prince of Wales in knitting is said to have given impetus to the movement among society women.

Spring Hosiery Shades Inspired by Cuisine

Fashion will turn to the cuisine for inspiration in the spring hosiery shades. Among the new colors will be "ice tea," "ice coffee, "egg nog," and "frappe." The first is a dark suntan, the second a medium suntan, the third a nude evening shade and the fourth a light neutral shade.

Since fabric colors will be bright for spring, hosiery tints will show a livelier quality.

Cooking Called Science in U.S., Art in France

Speed in Preparing Meals in America Impresses Mme. Alphandery.

AMERICA has not yet developed cookery as an art, in the belief of Mme. Andre Alphandery, lecturer, of Paris, who addressed the Alliance Francaise Groupe de Washington yesterday on "La Cuisine Francaise."

"American cooking is very interesting, particularly from the hygienic standpoint," Mme. Alphandery said. "Its chief value lies in its scientific and health-giving values. But in France, cookery is intimately bound up with the history and romance of the nation."

The quickness with which the American woman prepares a meal has impressed Mme. Alphandery. And that, she points out, may be one reason why cookery is more of a science than an art in this country.

"The French housewife spends anywhere from two to three hours in preparing a meal," she said, "but in America the average housewife gets dinner in from 30 to 45 minutes."

Mme. Alphandery reviewed the history of the French cuisine, which she said dated back to the tenth century.

"During all these years," she said, "cookery has become interwoven with legend, historical events and famous characters with the result that the French cuisine has become a world-renowned art."

Napoleon was mentioned by Mme. Alphandery as contributing much legend and history to French cooking.

"American cookery as yet has little historical background," she said. "Only two or three dishes stand out as being distinctively American, while there are hundreds of famous ones that belong to France."

Beauty Hints Are Disclosed By Film Stars

By Frances Mangum.

JUST AS fashion news from Paris catches the feminine ear, so do the beauty hints from Hollywood. There the stars are constantly on the lookout for new and effective methods for enhancing their appearance. Lately came these suggestions:

If you are letting your eyebrows grow or if you did not exactly succeed the last time you tried to arch them, pencil them in. Here's the real secret, says Ginger Rogers. You don't need a regular eyebrow pencil; an ordinary lead pencil will do the work. Moisten the point by dipping it in a little cold cream and then pencil in the brows.

To give a sleek appearance to a finished hairdress, work brilliantine into the surface of the waves with the back of the comb instead of combing the oil into the hair, says Thelma Todd. This will give a gloriously glossy finish.

A New Beauty Fad.

The newest Hollywood beauty fad is applying liquid rouge on the inside between each finger in delicate shades that blend with the skin tint and the shade of nail enamel used. Fingers treated this way, say those who've tried it, appear more tapering and the entire hand is given a delicacy and whiteness that is otherwise lacking.

Ann Harding has a simple formula for obtaining that scintillating transparent complexion so much desired by fair women. She packs her face in warm lemon juice for five minutes each night before retiring.

Here is a suggestion from Betty Furness. It is simple and inexpensive to cure a dry skin. Drink water, glasses of it every day and you will be surprised at the rapid improvement.

Selection of Face Powder.

Mary Carlisle believes there is nothing as unflattering as too light a face powder. Select the warm, glowing tint which is correct for your own skin tones, and discard the lifeless shade you may have been using.

Cold water and the mildest of skin tonics are the only astringents one should use on a very dry skin, says Steffi Duna.

To aid in attaining complete relaxation ask your beauty operator to place small pads dipped in hot water over your eyes while she is shampooing your hair, Marion Nixon suggests.

Ryan 'Regrets' West Virginia Share in Fight

U. S. Trying to Force Firm to Get Federal Permit for New River Dam.

Oswald Ryan, general counsel for the Federal Power Commission, yesterday termed as "regrettable" the decision of West Virginia to intervene against the United States in the Government's effort to compel the Union Carbide & Carbon Co. and the Electrical Metallurgical Co. to secure a Federal license for the $10,000,000 Hawkshead project on the New River, according to the Associated Press.

Ryan told the Associated Press he had conferred with Gov. Kump and Attorney General Holt last week on the issue and that they had told him of their belief that the Federal water power act is unconstitutional.

"This is exactly the position taken by the defendant," Ryan said.

The act gives the power commission authority to license projects on navigable streams in cases where power is developed for interstate or foreign commerce.

The State authorities announced their intention of intervening on the ground they were anxious to protect the rights of the State of West Virginia.

Ryan said that "the license which the Federal Power Commission would have the company accept protects every interest of the people of West Virginia. Cooperation with, not encroachment upon, State sovereignty is the keynote of the Federal water power act and is the commission's policy."

Some months ago the Government asked the Federal District Court of the Southern District of West Virginia to require the defendants to obtain a license. The defendants answered this with a petition for an injunction and a hearing on the issue is scheduled for January 7. It was expected the case of the State authorities would also be heard on that date.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—Harry R. Houston, of Hampton, who for many years was a leader in Virginia politics, returned to public office here today when he qualified as associate State director of the Federal Housing Administration.

He will be associated with Robert Hunt, of Roanoke, who is director of the FHA in Virginia. Both will have offices here, but Mr. Houston will spend much of his time in promotional and development work throughout the State.

Mr. Houston's last public office was that of commissioner of fisheries under Gov. Harry Flood Byrd, during his administration in that office he was confronted with the widely heralded oyster war in the Gloucester-Mobjack Bay section.

Plans Being Made to Beautify Historic Grounds of Church

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Beautification of the historic grounds surrounding the Salem Baptist Church at Chancellorsville, near here, will be completed within 30 days.

Improvements will consist principally of landscaping. The church lawn will be terraced, and will beautify the expanse of ground where Union and Confederate soldiers fought one of the most important skirmishes of the Battle of Chancellorsville.

The church was the scene of the Battle of Salem Church, which occurred May 4 and 5, 1863. Hooker's main army was at Chancellorsville, but had finished fighting when this battle, planned to be simultaneous with his action, began.

Hooker had left Sedgwick at Fredericksburg, with instructions to attack Lee from the rear when hostilities began. Sedgwick, after taking Marye's Heights in the second battle of Fredericksburg, was repulsed on the Orange turnpike. He reached Salem Church while Hooker was already in retreat, and attacked a small Confederate force there.

The walls of the church still contain numerous shells and relics, some of which are unearthed from time to time. The church congregation was organized in 1844, but the exact date of the erection of the building is not known.

A committee to supervise the improvements has been appointed by the Rev. B. Venable, pastor. Members are Mrs. John Steck, chairman; Mrs. Jesse McWhirt, Mrs. Miles Houser, Mrs. E. O. Paytes and C. L. Rhoades.

Nippon Fearful Of Exclusion In Naval Talks

Wants Consideration in Any Pact Even Though It Will Junk Treaty.

strengths, but less than Britain. He said the reports were false, thus moving to eliminate growing suspicion among the American delegation.

A spokesman denied that the date for Japan's denunciation of the treaty had been discussed by Davis and Matsudaira, emphasizing this is entirely a matter for Tokyo to decide.

Japan Plans Secret Ships, Is Report

London, Nov. 26 (AP).—Certain naval quarters tonight suggested that when Japan junks the Washington Naval Treaty of 1922, a "naval race of technical improvements" may follow, resulting in new types of powerful warships which would make Germany's pocket battleships look like the galleons of old Spain.

The United States' plans, it was indicated, would be made in general cooperation with Great Britain, thereby conforming with the American hopes for an accord on general policies. Such an accord, it was believed, probably will be suggested to Great Britain if there is no new naval treaty.

The accord would not bind either nation to concerted action on all types of ships, but would eliminate open competition between the two powers and keep both ahead of Japan, if possible, on all technical improvements.

Surprise Type Forecast.

The Japanese have indicated they have plans ready for a surprise type of ship if a naval building race should start. The United States delegates do not appear disturbed by this since they are understood to believe the United States is in the best position to outrace anyone if necessary.

Conjectures regarding likely technical improvements range from bigger battleships and more powerful cruisers to fleets of enormous and powerful airplanes carried on extremely speedy and large aircraft-carriers, with a surprise type of a new combination ship thrown in for good measure.

A denunciation of the Washington Treaty would become effective December 31, 1936. The three delegations to the present preliminary conversations between the United States, Great Britain and Japan have assumed that the treaty will be strictly observed until that date. The delegates have indicated they are hopeful that in the intervening two years some mutual agreement would be obtained to prevent a construction race.

Speculation Is Rife.

There seemed to be considerable speculation today as to whether many battleships would be replaced immediately at the beginning of such a race or whether efforts would be concentrated on other types of ships.

During the conversations last summer, the British indicated they would need a total of 70 cruisers for patrolling British Empire routes if there were no treaty.

Ambassador Tsuneo Matsudaira met Norman H. Davis, of the United States delegation, today, but their conversations did not produce any new angles on the situation. It is probable that the next conversations will be between the Japanese and the British, but when that meeting will be is problematical because of the present debates in the House of Commons.

Bigger Naval Budget Asked for France

Paris, Nov. 26 (AP).—The intention of France, "with eyes on the future," to strengthen her navy in step with the German and Italian fleets, was announced today by Jacques Stern, reporting an increased navy budget to the Chamber of Deputies.

The proposed appropriation was 2,967,000,000 francs ($195,800,000), which was 24,000,000 francs more than last year.

At St. Nazaire today the keel was laid for the Strasbourg, sister ship to the 26,000-ton Donquerque, designed to match Germany's new "pocket battleship," Deutschland.

Warrenton, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—J. Davenport Blackwell, of the Blackwell Engineering & Construction Co., of Warrenton, has been awarded the contract for erection of a hospital in Staunton. This firm also is engaged in projects in Arlington, Fauquier and other northern Virginia counties.

Plot to Flow Opium in China Laid to Japan

Geneva, Nov. 26 (AP).—Charges that Japan, by accumulating vast stocks of opium in Manchukuo, sought to make drug addicts out of the Cinese population and thus "weaken their morale," were revealed today in confidential League of Nations records published for the first time.

It also was revealed that Japan, which resigned from the League of Nations, has threatened to withdraw from the league's advisory committee on opium trafic because of the charges.

A formal protest against the insinuations, allegedly made by Wellington Koo, of China, was submitted by Masayuki Yokoyama, Japanese consul general in Geneva. He declared the insinuations were unjustified.

"No one intends to poison Chinese people," he said.

The matter of handling Manchukuan mail also has been brought to League of Nations attention. It was revealed that a number of countries, including Argentina, Spain and Venezuela, had written the league approving a decision to allow Manchukuo to collect dues for their share of transporting international mail, providing this does not imply recognition of Manchukuo.

The league had asked various countries not to recognize Manchukuo because of Japan's military activities.

Russia has agreed to forward mail from Europe on the Trans-Siberian Railway to China by way of Manchukuo, but declined responsibility for it. The United States signified its willingness to conform to the recommendations of the league if any action were necessary.

Registration tags must also be perforated showing that the automobile taxes have been paid, Commissioner Baughman explained.

At the Pythian Grand Lodge annual convention here last month he was elected grand outer guard on the first ballot. He was general chairman of the convention arrangements committee.

Jury Acquits Man In Claw Test Case

Baltimore, Nov. 26 (AP).—A criminal court jury today gave a verdict of not guilty in the case of a Baltimore merchant charged with operating a gambling device in connection with operation of a "claw" machine.

The case had been regarded as a test case to determine if the slot machines afforded "tests of skill" or were gambling devices. The machines are minature derricks which, when primed with a coin, "grab" for merchandise in the machine.

The defendant found not guilty was Jorge Pappas, operator of a confectionery store. The charges have been pending ever since last May.

3-Year Term

Manslaughter Plea Taken From Sam Johnson at Waynesboro.

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Sam Johnson pleaded guilty to manslaughter in Augusta County Circuit Court today, and was sentenced by Judge Joseph A. Glasgow to serve three years in the penitentiary. He was charged with the slaying of J. C. (Buster) Campbell in a knife battle on Main street here September 8.

The move today on the part of Johnson's counsel was unexpected, since witnesses had been summoned to appear for hearing tomorow.

Commonwealth's Attorney John D. White and Attorney Louis F. Jordan, retained by the Campbell family to assist in the prosecution, accepted Johnson's manslaughter plea and Judge Glasgow pronounced sentence immediately.

The slaying was the result of an argument which began in a boarding house, of whcih Mrs. Lillian Johnson, wife of the convicted man, was proprietor, and ended on the crowded sidewalk of the business district in front of the house when Campbell's head was slashed almost from his body. Johnson was also severely cut in the abdomen during the melee and remained under guard in a hospital until two weeks ago.

ELEMENTS OF PROGRESS

Reliability

RELIABILITY was the corner stone upon which was built the lasting fame and honor that was William Cody's. In their heart-searing struggle for existence, the pioneers relied for safety and protection on this fleet, brave Indian scout; he became a symbol of security in the wild frontier life. Keeping the early settlers reliably informed of coming Indian raids, his estimate of the number of savages and the strategy of his plans for resistance were remarkable. When food supplies ran low and famine threatened, his uncanny trailing sense invariably led to buffalo meat or venison. Because of his absolute reliability, "Buffalo Bill" was as water to the thirsty and walls to the defenseless . . . and a prime factor in opening up the western wilderness for the march of civilization.

RELIABILITY is one of The Washington Post's precepts of progress. Along today's news frontiers . . . into the wilderness of unverifiable fact . . . up the canyons of politics and across the deserts of foreign affairs . . . the eye of the newspaper reader wends its way like the old-time pioneer. And in The Washington Post, as in Buffalo Bill, the reader-explorer finds a reliable source of information . . . a protection against misguidance.

The Post gives its readers, in its advertising columns, the same reliability of news about merchandise. The wise advertiser relies on The Post because he knows that the reader has learned that he, too, may rely upon it . . . to their mutual profit!

United Action Crushes Crime At Pittsburgh

Thugs and Gamblers Jailed or Banished Under New Regime.

In what manner have other cities reduced crime and racketeering? The answer to that question is being published in The Washington Post in a series of articles, of which this is the second.

Moving against lawlessness in a united offensive, authorities in Pittsburgh have jailed or banished the majority of the city's known criminals and crime has been effectively checked.

Mayor William N. McNair, inaugurated in January of this year, has succeeded in divorcing politics from law enforcement. Strengthened by their freedom from influence, the police, the prosecutors and the courts have combined their power and authority with the result that Pittsburgh has become a dangerous place for criminals and racketeers to attempt to ply their trade.

Showing a substantial drop from last year's figures, major crimes committed in Pittsburgh in the first six months of this year totaled 2,004. Included in that number are the offenses of murder, robbery, burglary, larceny and auto theft only.

Crimes in Capital.

In Washington during the first half of 1934 the total of crimes in the above classifications numbered 5,820, or almost three times the number committed in Pittsburgh in the same period.

The population of the two cities is approximately the same, Washington having somewhat less than 500,000 and Pittsburgh having about 550,000. The area of Washington is 60 square miles, while Pittsburgh covers approximately 50 square miles. Taking the population and area of the two into consideration, the police strength is just about equal. Washington's police department has 1,004 employes and in Pittsburgh there are 1,099.

The composition of population in Pittsburgh is quite different from that of Washington. More than one-fifth of the people there are of foreign birth and about 50,000 are Negroes. Being an industrial and railroad center, the city has a vast laboring class, on the other hand, and a minority of very wealthy citizens on the other.

Methods of Prevention.

Crime prevention is given serious and constant thought and facilities for improving living conditions and educational and recreational opportunities are provided on an elaborate scale. The city has 556 churches, 14 Y. M. C. A. branches, 6 Y. W. C. A. branches, 20 all-year playgrounds, 14 public swimming pools, 26 parks and over 200 social welfare agencies.

Endowments and gifts from such families as the Mellons, Carnegies, Fricks and Schenleys provide what is perhaps the most extensive system of schools, colleges, universities, libraries and other places of education to be found in America.

Those social factors play an important part in the crime record of any community and doubtless account, in part, for the low frequency of crime in Pittsburgh.

Gambling, and particularly the numbers game, was dealt a body blow there by Judge Frank W. Patterson, of the criminal court, who deputized a number of citizens and cloaked them with the authority of constables in order to obtain evidence against gamblers. As a result of the work of these deputies the police were able to raid gambling houses. Those arrested were hailed into Judge Patterson's court for trial. Valuable aid was given by the Pennsylvania State police.

District Attorney Andrew T. Park has made a notable record for cutting red tape and preventing delays of criminal cases.

Statement by Mayor.

Mayor McNair disregarded political affiliations in the selection of his cabinet and appointed to head the various municipal departments men of known ability. Men who had never held public office were given preference with the result that those who might wish to "reach" those in authority were unable to do so.

Describing his attitude toward crime control and the best means of solving the crime problem Mayor McNair sent the following statement to The Washington Post:

"The basis of most of the crime in our American cities, to my mind, is the connection between politics and criminality. If local political leaders protect gambling, those who run the gambling houses have power with the police.

"A criminal comes to the city and practices his profession by taking refuge in a gambling house. In the City of Pittsburgh we have broken the connection between politics and organized vice. As a result we have very little major crime.

"I believe the average policeman wants to do his duty. If his hands are tied by political obligation he can not do good police work. In such circumstances crime will run wild. Give policemen freedom to do their duty and criminals will avoid your city."

'Neanderthal Skull' Declared Still Existent in U. S. Today

Dr. Ales Hrdlicka Offers Claim in Diagnosing Latest Discovery.

Modern Americans frequently show skull types that hark back to the Neanderthalers of prehistoric Europe, the Smithsonian Institution observed yesterday while announcing that another item offered in support of an unproved theory that Neanderthal men roamed the United States had been found incorrect.

Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology, said the variations among present-day inhabitants of the United States showed Neanderthal skull types that would easily deceive any one but an expert, if found isolated, and would leave even the expert puzzled if the geology of the burial place were unknown.

The newest skull suggested as a proof of the thesis that Neanderthalers lived and struggled here was found near St. Helena, Nebr. Forwarded to Dr. Hrdlicka, evidence of the skull itself and the geological strata in which it rested indicated that it belonged to an Indian who lived from 500 to 1,000 years ago, probably belonging to an advanced tribe that may have been ancestral to the Sioux. With heavy ridges of bone over the eyes and a very low cranial vault, the skull could easily have been suspected of Neanderthal affiliations, and the tribe may have had an unusual tendency to produce apparently primitive skull variants, just as certain Australian tribes have today.

Virginia's Claims To Boundary Filed

Low-Water Mark on State Side Cited in Brief.

A brief outlining the case of the Commonwealth of Virginia and Arlington County was filed here yesterday with the Virginia-District of Columbia Boundary Commission.

The commission, which is composed of Charles H. Brough, William C. Gloth and Malcolm S. McConihe, set December 17 as the date on which the Federal Government shall present its answer. Setting forth more than a score of arguments why the boundary should be fixed at low-water mark on the Virginia side, the brief was filed by Abram P. Staples, attorney general for the Commonwealth; Lawrence W. Douglas, Arlington prosecutor, and Frank L. Ball, special counsel.

At its meeting yesterday the commission announced that public hearings will be scheduled after the Federal Government has submitted its case. Briefs will be invited from property holders involved in the boundary dispute.

Swindler Mulcts Motor Salesman In Demonstration

A swindler with dirty fingernails got a free auto ride yesterday and $1.80 of the driver's money.

Matthew D. Sample, an auto salesman, told police the man asked for a demonstration of a car. Sample drove him around the city, pointing out the car's qualities. The man suddenly remembered he had to pick up a c. o. d. package at the Postoffice. Sample drove him there, and loaned him the money when, in great embarrassment, the man found he was short of change.

The man then disappeared into the Postoffice.

After some waiting, Sample went inside and looked for him, and then reported to police.

1,181 Here Receive FHA Repair Loans

In the brief period that the "modernization" drive of the Federal Housing Administration has been in progress here 1,181 property owners in Washington have borrowed money under the Government plan to repair or remodel their buildings.

Announcement of this was made recently by Thomas P. Littlepage, general chairman of the Washington Better Housing Campaign.

Chairman Littlepage said a report received from Frederick P. H. Siddons, president of the District Bankers Association, showed the banks had granted 591 such loans representing a total outlay of $313,000.

From Carl J. Bergmann, president of the District Building and Loan League, he said, had come a report showing that building and loan associations had granted 590 loans amounting to $322,000.

Mr. Littlepage estimated that the total amount spent since September 1 probably exceeds $2,000,000.

Cumberland Gets Bright Trade Index

Rail Traffic Increases, Brisk Buying Over Week-end Noted.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 26 (AP).—A marked improvement in business during November with higher sales records, better collections and increased volume over the same period of last year was indicated in a survey of business leaders here.

With a steady rise in business conditions, particularly during last week, the leaders found a favorable outlook for the winter months, unemployment was expected to be lessened.

Credit bureaus indicated that credit generally was easing somewhat and individuals and business concerns said more orders for new merchandise were being placed.

There wash a steady production of manufactured goods at local factories and plants. Wholesale houses also reported an increase particularly in the amount of holiday and season merchandise.

Building Material Sales.

One particular branch of trade and manufacture that had been more or less dormant for many months showed signs of renewed life and additional output. This branch includes the various divisions of the building material business.

Sales of lumber, brick, tile, cement, hardware and plumbing fixtures soared, while building permits in Cumberland and Allegany County increased during the past month.

Clothing, shoes, groceries, meats and other commodities, including furniture, both new and used, have had their share of general increase, leaders said, with the approaching holidays bringing on additional business. Merchants dealing in ready-made wearing apparel reported over the week-end "one of the best Saturdays experienced for many weeks."

Rail Traffic Up.

Railroads showed a steady rise in traffic, with car loadings gradually moving toward higher levels. Travel by bus and train was also report d on the increase. Local industries were nearly all working at normal and one of the larger plant: was operating at near its peak. This concern had recently placed nearly 1,000 additional persons at work, and the past few weekly pay rolls were reported the largest in its history.

With the interceptor sewer project, the Green street sewer project, the new high school building and smaller improvements and propositions to be under way in the near future, unemployment was expected to lessen considerably.

W. Va. Legion Urges Bonus

Both State and Federal Payments Will Be Sought.

Huntington, W. Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.). — West Virginia American Legionnaires were on record today in favor of immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus by the Federal Government and a bonus by the State.

The conference authorized Claude L. Smith, State commander of the Legion, to offer a bill in the coming State Legislature providing for a State bonus of at least $15 monthly and a maximum payment of $300 to veterans in West Virginia.

A program for 1935 adopted by the conference includes a drive against Communism and greater efforts to obtain aid for veterans, their widows and dependants.

Former Secretary of War to Speak at William and Mary.

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—Newton D. Baker will deliver the James Goold Cutler address here December 10. He will speak on "Making and Keeping the Constitution."

Among those who have accepted invitations to hear the address by the former Secretary of War are members of the State Supreme Court of Appeals and Gov. Peery.

The Cutler address is given annually at the College of William and Mary under provisions of the James Goold Cutler Foundation, which provide that lectures are to be given annually on the Federal Constitution by a person outside the faculty of the college, "who is an eminent authority on the subject."

Announcement that Mr. Baker will be the speaker this year was made today by John Stewart Bryan, president of the college. The address will be delivered at noon, followed by a luncheon for the distinguished guests who have been invited to attend the ceremony.

Foster Studio, Richmond.

WILBUR C. HALL, of Leesburg, Va., member of the Virginia House of Delegates from Loudoun County, who has been mentioned as full-time chairman of the Virginia Commission on Conservation and Development.

E. Griffith Dodson Takes Over Clerk's Duties at Richmond.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—E. Griffith Dodson, of Norfolk, whom Gov. Peery has appointed to succeed the late Col. John W. Williams, clerk of the House of Delegates, came to Richmond today to qualify and assume his new duties.

"Col. Williams set standards for his office which will be mighty hard to meet, but I shall do my best," Mr. Dodson said.

Meanwhile, it was learned that members of the assembly generally are much pleased at the Governor's choice and that there is every possibility that the assembly will accept the appointment and elect Mr. Dodson in 1936 for the full term.

Many members of the assembly endorsed Mr. Dodson for the place. He is a Norfolk attorney and banker.

The new State official today had made no plans for the removal of his residence to Richmond.

Jay W. Johns, of Albemarle, today was being mentioned as the probable successor to Mr. Dodson on the State Conservation and Development Commission, and Wilbur C. Hall, of Loudoun, prominent member of the House of Delegates was cited as a prospect for the full-time chairmanship January 1.

Among the Tidewater men being groomed for the Dodson vacancy is B. B. Burroughs, of Norfolk, head of the Seashore State Park Association, who is reported to have conceived the idea of the Cape Henry Park.

Mr. Johns headed the Virginia public works advisory committee and is a member of the State Armory Commission. He is the owner and restorer of Ash Lawn, which for 26 years was the home of James Monroe, and has been prominently identified with many State activities for a number of years. Beer Halls Ordered To Close by Sheriff

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.). Hotchkiss, accompanied by State and city police officers, visited a number of road houses, taverns and amusement places in and around the city after midnight yesterday morning.

The sheriff and his party made no arrests, but ordered several places closed and cautioned operators against certain provisions of the law that might be easily violated.

Line Seeking London Port Meets Fight

U. S.-Owned Firm Balks at Baltimore Mail Application.

Petition Cites Better Service Planned Under Shift.

The application of the Baltimore Mail Line to establish a new fast freight service from Baltimore and Norfolk to London met with spirited opposition at the Shipping Board hearing yesterday from operators of the American Hampton Roads Line, the Associated Press reported.

The Baltimore Mail, which now makes weekly sailings from the Chesapeake ports to Havre and Hamburg, applied to the board for permission to call at London instead of Havre on alternate eastbound trips.

The change, proponents of the plan argued, would give the Chesapeake area a service it does not have at present and would be of special benefit to American exporters of provisions and apples to the United Kingdom.

The Hampton Roads line, owned by the Government and operated under a Shipping Board contract by the Southgate Nelson Corporation, runs a service from bay ports to London, but officials of the Baltimore Mail Line argued that it was in no way comparable to the service they proposed, as the average length of the trip for Hampton Roads vessels in the past year was 21 days, that only six of its 23 sailings were on scheduled time, that four of them were omitted altogether and that its ships averaged five days behind schedule through the year.

W. F. Taylor, president of the Southgate-Nelson Corporation, and Charles L. Kaufman, attorney, told the board that granting of the Baltimore Mail's application would result in serious tonnage losses to the Hampton Roads line and that in approving the application the Government would be injuring its own property.

Fauquier Farmer Burned to Death

Unable to Gain Stream as Clothes Blaze.

Front Royal, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.). The body of Norman Green, aged about 50, of Front Royal, was found this evening about 5 o'clock, near a cabin on his farm near Linden, Va., in Fauquier County, burned almost beyond recognition. It is believed that Green's clothing caught fire in the shanty and that he vainly attempted to reach a nearby stream to extinguish the flames.

He is survived by his widow, three sons and a daughter.

Group Urges Milk Control In Virginia

Virginia Producers Hope Appeals Court Will Reverse Ruling.

Recent Decision Calling Bill Unconstitutional Is Deplored.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—Milk producers said to represent more than 50 per cent of the fluid milk producing area of Virginia today passed resolutions expressing the hope that the State supreme court of appeals would reverse its recent decision holding the Virginia milk control act unconstitutional.

A representative of the National Milk Producers Federation, who spoke at the meeting held here this afternoon, referred to the Virginia decision as the severest blow that has been encountered nationally by the industry.

Drawn by John S. Barber, attorney for the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, Robert T. Barton, jr., of the Richmond Cooperative Milk Producers Association, and W. P. Hazelgrove, of the Roanoke Association, the resolutions stated textually that they represented the unanimous opinion of authorized representatives of milk producers associations of Charlottesville, Danville, Harrisonburg, Newport News, Norfolk, Roanoke, Richmond, Waynesboro, the Maryland-Virginia Association, the Virginia State Dairymen's Association and individual producers from Hopewell, Petersburg, Staunton and Williamsburg.

They said the Virginia milk and cream act of 1934 "has proven by its actual operation of immeasurable benefit to the producers, distributors and consumers and in many localities has meant the economic salvation of the industry."

Continuation of regulation under legislative authority was termed "essential to preserve the industry and insure a stabilized supply of healthful and wholesome milk at a price compensatory to the producer and reasonable to the consumer" and regret was expressed that the State supreme court had deemed it necessary to hold the act unconstitutional in its entirety.

The resolutions expressed gratification that the Attorney General intends to file a petition for a rehearing of the case and an earnest hope that the court will grant this petition and reverse its decision.

Virginia's Capitol Square

Tax Commissioner Morrisett Reveals the Working of His Department and Shows How It Proved of Material Benefit to State.

This is the fourth of a series of articles describing the workings of the State government at Richmond through the medium of interviews with department heads and personal inspection of the State offices.

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

Richmond, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—"I am informed," said Mr. Virginius Taxpayer's Capitol Square guide to C. H. Morrisett, State tax commissioner, "that in the last fiscal year it cost the State $104,751 to maintain your department. I notice, too, that it occupies almost an entire floor in the State Office Building. Why all this organization? Isn't it true that up to 1926 the State got along without a tax department and had only an ex officio tax board made up of State officers with other duties?"

"During the four fiscal years ended June 30, 1933," the commissioner replied, "this department assessed taxes to the amount of $1,780,396.10 on intangible personal property, individual and fiduciary incomes and licenses, which had been omitted from returns and were discovered only by audit. This is revenue which the State would have lost entirely prior to the establishment of this department on April 15, 1926.

"During the same four fiscal years, the department assessed as result of audits in administering the corporation income tax law additional taxes to the amount of $496,228.86. This is likewise revenue which the State would have lost under localized administration of this law, as it existed prior to the establishment of this department."

Filing Systems.

He added: "Let me show you a part of our filing system," and led the way across the hall and into a long room filled with tiers of steel cabinets.

"These," he said, "are merely the individual tax files. There are others for corporations, partnerships and other groupings. The divisions of this department have been classified by the filing systems which have been found necessary to carry on the work.

"There is the division of administration, headed by the tax commissioner and then, the division of individual taxes, headed by Henry R. Miller, jr.; corporation taxes, headed by H. T. Leake; partnership taxes, headed by Ralph Izard; inheritance taxes, headed by Jesse W. Dillon; beverage and beer taxes, just added this year and also headed by Mr. Leake, and the division of statistics, headed by Dr. William H. Stauffer.

"This individual tax filing system will give you an idea of how the others work. Here I can find the complete tax record of an individual in any part of the State as easily as I could look up a word in the dictionary. Suppose, for example, I want to see the record of John Frasier—here it is (withdrawing a labeled folder from the cabinet). Here are his income returns for the last three years and all the other information we have relating to his tax records.

Value of Check-Up.

"Having all these records in one place and alphabetically arranged it is possible to check with income lists turned in by employers and with Federal income tax lists and catch the tax evaders who escaped for years under the old system when records were kept in the localities.

"An extensive check-up system is used in administering laws taxing intangibles, individual and fiduciary incomes and licenses. Understatements and omissions on returns are investigated by the department and appropriate action taken. All ascertainable delinquents are assessed."

Telling in a more general way of the work of his department, Mr. Morrisett said that it administers the general tax laws of the State, with the exception of the State laws relating to public service corporations, insurance companies, taxes on franchises, fees on registrations, licenses on motor vehicles and taxes on motor vehicle fuels.

Corporation Tax Law.

"It administers directly the corporation income tax law, the inheritance tax law and the beverage excise tax law," he said. "It administers through local officials the State capitation tax law, the laws taxing intangibles including money and capital, the laws taxing the stock owned by banks and trust companies, the laws taxing incomes of individuals and fiduciaries, the general license laws of the State and the recording tax laws.

"It prepares and furnishes various forms and books for use of local assessing officers for the assessment of real estate, tangible personal property, machinery and tools and merchants' capital, these being subjects which are set apart for local taxation exclusively.

"While the authority of the department of taxation in the field of local taxation is circumscribed," he concluded, "yet a great deal of time is expended in advising and instructing local officers as to their duties and in explaining the tax laws to them."

(In the fifth article of this series, to be published by The Post on Thursday, H. G. Shirley, State highway commissioner, discusses the Virginia road program.)

Five Generations—Aged 4 to 75 Years

Five generations of the same Williamsport, Md., family, all born within the last 75 years, are represented in the above group. Mrs. Elizabeth Moudy, 75 (extreme left), is the great-great-grandmother of Dolores Mitchell, aged 4, shown standing in front of the group. Reading from left to right from Mrs. Moudy is her daughter, Mrs. Bertha L. Garrish, 49, who is believed to be the youngest great-grandmother in the United States, and her daughter, Mrs. Grace Zimmerman, 32, who is the grandmother of Dolores, while Dolores' mother, Mrs. Rosalie Mitchell, 16 when Dolores was born, is shown just back of the child and on the extreme right. Aside from failing eyesight, Mrs. Moudy says she feels young enough to be a grandmother and is hopeful of becoming a great-great-great-grandmother.

4 Are Seeking Presidency of Teachers' Body

3,000 Educators Due Today in Richmond for 4-Day Convention.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—From 3,000 to 3,500 educators from all parts of the State are expected to attend the four-day annual convention of the Virginia Education Association, beginning tomorrow, according to C. J. Heatwole, of the association.

"We are expecting the largest crowd that has attended any of the association's conventions in years," Mr. Heatwole said.

"In addition, the sessions will be of unusual interest, for not only the election of a new president is scheduled but there is a series of vital resolutions to be passed, as well as amendments to the constitution," he declared.

There are already four candidates for president in the field, and there will probably be other nominations at the meeting Wednesday night, he said.

The four present candidates are Roland Cooke, superintendent of schools in Roanoke County; John E. Martin, superintendent of schools of the City of Suffolk; J. Walton Hall, superintendent of schools in Hanover County, and probably Robert Newton, superintendent of schools in Hampton and Elizabeth City County, according to Mr. Heatwole.

The vote for the new president will be by ballot at the Friday evening session.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" might be the title for the following article which was sent The Post by a contributor down at Warrenton, Va., where the country gentry is noted today for its fox-hunting clans:

In an old minute book in the Fauquier County clerk's office, Warrenton, dated August 22, 1825, is an item ordering "the court to be closed, and the courthouse closed, except to the ladies who might be permitted to have seats therein, to hear Lafayette speak."

Also 100 years ago, November 24, 1834, at the session of court, John P. Smith, Joseph Thompson, Thomas Shearman and Charles Hunton, justices, were present. A long list of conveyances is entered, sworn to (teste) by A. J. Marshall, county clerk. There were no end of commissioners' reports, cases continued, etc., and the following entry:

Another entry of interest at this time showing Fauquier had her troubles a hundred years ago; Aldridge James, foreman; John G. Beale, Eli Holtzclaw, Henry M. Lewis, William L. Carter, Josiah Murray, Richard H. Foote, Henry Bupey, William D. Fitzhugh, Joseph Penquite, John B. Gibson, Joseph Boteler, Thomas Neale, Elias Utterback, John Morehead and George B. Dixon, were sworn a grand jury for this county, and after some time returned into court and made a presentment against Fanny Reed for selling, by retail at her place of residence in Fauquier County, ardent spirits to be drank where sold without license within one year last past; also a presentment against Gustavius B. Campbell for selling, by retail at his residence within Fauquier County, ardent spirits to be drank where sold without license within one year last past; also a presentment against Bazil Williams for selling, by retail at his place of residence within Fauquier County, ardent spirits to be drank where sold without license within one year last past, and the grand jury having nothing further to present were discharged.

H. M. Albaugh Dies Suddenly At Utica, Md.

Was Active in Church, and Attended Service Just Before Fatal Stroke.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Harry M. Albaugh, 61, well-known farmer near Utica, died yesterday from angina pectoris, from which he suffered about two years. He was born at Lewistown and resided in that locality all his life.

About eight years ago h.. retired and moved to Utica. He was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church and was active in church work. He attended church yesterday morning and apparently was as well as usual until stricken.

Besides his wife, formerly Miss Rosa Measell, he is survived by two sons, Luther Albaugh, Ladiesburg, and Ward Albaugh, Walkersville, and three daughters, Mrs. Bernard Zimmerman, this city; Mrs. Paul Buhrman, Utica, and Mrs. Garnet Noffsinger, Walkersville. Two brothers and two sisters also survive.

Mrs. James Edgar Dies.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.). Mrs. James Edgar, 84, grandmother of Mrs. William D. Byron, Williamsport, died at her home in Detroit, Mich., today.

Mrs. Edgar was the daughter of Judge William C. Goodloe and granddaughter of Gov. William Cusley, of Kentucky. The Republican Party in Kentucky had its birth in the home of her father. Her late husband was a wealthy sugar manufacturer of Detroit, and the father of the late Gen. C. Goodloe Edgar, of Detroit and Washington.

Mrs. Edgar had spent much of her time here.

G. E. Murrell Buried.

Lynchburg, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Funeral services for George E. Murrell, 68, formerly of this city, a resident of Washington who died Thursday in Crawford, Miss., were conducted this morning with burial in Presbyterian Cemetery.

Mr. Murrell formerly lived at Fontella. At one time he represented Bedford County in the State Legislature and was president of the Virginia Horticultural Society.

Farmer, 79, Slain by Foe In Land Row

Neighbor, 64, Claims He Shot After Being Attacked.

Former Peace Justice Is Held in Jail at Woodstock.

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Peter J. Cook, 79, Powell Fort Valley farmer, was shot and killed today at his home near Edith, 12 miles east of here, by James A. Smith, a 64-year-old neighbor, following a quarrel.

Smith told police that Cook and his son, Lew Cook, attacked him.

Bad feeling has existed between the men for some time because of a dispute over boundary lines. Smith came to Shenandoah County from Bedford County, where he was a justice of the peace, and the pistol used in the killing was purchased while he was an officer.

Sheriff Luther G. Sheetz has been called to that section frequently because of disputes between Cook and Smith. Cook was tried and convicted in a Shenandoah County court some years ago for assaulting the former owner of the farm which Smith purchased.

In jail here Smith stated that he shot Cook in self defense and was on his way to surrender to officers when he was arrested.

Jamestown Work Requires Aid

Archeological Staff Is Joined by H. S. Day.

Yorktown, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—The nature and extent of research work carried on at Jamestown Island by the National Park Service has necessitated an increase in the archeological technical supervisory staff, B. Floyd Flickinger, superintendent of the Colonial National Monument, announced today.

The Colonial National Monument has secured the services of H. S. Day, who will assist in the supervision of the exploratory excavations at Jamestown, site of the first permanent English settlement in America. He will be working with John Zaharov, who has been in charge of the work from its beginning, and will be assigned to camp NM-5, of which M. A. Acree is project superintendent.

Day is a graduate of the University of Illinois in archeology and has had a year of graduate work in anthropology at Harvard. He comes to Yorktown from Illinois, where he has been connected with the State in excavation work on various Indian mounds.

Game Off

Scarcity Evokes Protests of Maryland Hunters.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.). According to reports there is a loud "squawk" among hunters over the scarcity of game this year. There is complaint that during the squirrel season there was much unlawful killing, while snares and box-trapping in the county have cut down the number of rabbits this fall. Since the hunting season opened there is report that few quail have been killed, and turkeys are even fewer in numbers.

Cats abandoned along the road in the country by motorists are on the increase. These predatory animals kill off much game, quail and pheasants.

The Dramatic Desks Bend a Midnight and a Midday Eye Upon Two New Film Plays

Two Previews Disclose Many Items of Merit

'Kid Millions' and 'Anne' in Striking Contrast; Chat of the Showshops.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Private previews of important pictures, for the benefit of the ladies and gentlemen (sic) of the press, go on apace. In fact they go on a couple of paces!

Last Sunday midnight, Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, by proxy, entertained a considerable company of sundodgers at an advance trade screening of Eddie Cantor's latest extravaganza, "Kid Millions," in the spacious opulence of Loew's Fox Theater.

Yesterday morning at 11:30, Master Hardie Meakin, manager of RKO-Keith's Theater, unfurled "Anne of Green Gables" in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange for the delectation of a scant majority of the drama desks.

These two subjects are no more alike than caviar is like tapioca, but both are worthy of any judicious show-shopper's interested attention.

Cantor Goes Goofy.

"Kid Millions" contains a little bit of everything that could possibly contribute to a thoroughly goofy hour or two of gazing at the silver sheet. It embodies—of all things for a Cantor musical fol-de-rol—a sustained plot that is only occasionally abandoned to make way for spectacular musical interludes; a bit of minstrelsy, some gorgeous "girl" numbers, plenty of action, many ridiculous "gags," some new and some not so new; elaborate settings, gorgeous costumes and a cleverly conceived fantasy in natural color that serves as a fitting finale for a picture that never takes itself seriously and therefore can not be taken too seriously by those who view it.

The musical numbers—and they are not too many nor yet too frequently introduced—are shrewdly contrived to make the most of the abundant talent that is to be found in a cast that includes, in addition to the star, such adepts at this sort of thing as Ethel Merman, Ann Sothern, George Murphy, Warren Hymer, Stymie Beard and Tommy Bond.

Offers Surprises.

One of the surprises that may be looked forward to when "Kid Millions" eventually is presented on a public screen—and from present indications that will not be until along about Christmas time—is the skill displayed by Eve Sully, of the famous vaudeville team of Block and Sully, seen so often on local stages, as a screen comedienne.

As the daughter of the sheik, who holds the fate of Eddie and a treasure of $77,000,000 literally in the palm of his hand, Eve is a revelation. Indeed, in many of the scenes in which they appear together the grotesque and versatile Miss Sully is a good deal funnier than the button-eyed Mr. Cantor.

Jesse Block, cast in a minor role, hasn't the chance that is afforded his partner, but does well enough in a semi-villainous straight part.

Churchill Steps Out.

Another surprise will be encountered in the unusually amusing impersonation of a julep-dripping Southern colonel, from old Virginia, suh, contributed to the extravaganza's farcical ebullience by Burton Churchill, whom one never would suspect of this type of performance. Mr. Churchill, who customarily appears in parts of legitimate dramatic worth, turns out to be a comedian of the first water—fire water, for the most part!

For the serious minded, "Kid Millions" will be practically no dice, as the boys in the back room say. For those who enjoy an hour or so of unbridled foolishness, embellished with some nice tunes and more than a few stunning pictorial effects, it will prove the ne plus ultra among gay screen entertainments. When the time comes, the picture, of course, will be reviewed in detail in this space.

Novel Is Done Justice.

As for "Anne of Green Gables," that is something else again. RKO-Radio has achieved a remarkably faithful picturization of the novel by L. M. Montgomery and has been especially successful in casting the roles of prime importance consistently and well.

The whole atmosphere and movement of the story is one of simple bucolic charm. The characters are unpretentious country folk whose lives are oddly affected and interlocked by the ingenuous activities of an imaginative, garrulous, and sensitive little orphan girl, red-headed, not too pretty and maybe a little freckled, who is adopted into the home of Matthew and Marilla, brother and sister, when a boy had been expected from the orphanage.

The picture centers in the character of Anne Shirley, played by the former Dawn O'Day, who has adopted Anne Shirley, her character name in this picture, as her permanent stage name. She brings to the role every quality of fantastic imagination, quaint humor and enduring charm needed to place upon the screen a true personification of the character limned in the Montgomery novel.

Distinguished Support.

Her foster "parents," the kindly Matthew and the acidulous Marilla, are handsomely played by O. P. Heggie and Helen Westley, two of the living theater's most distinguished artists.

Washington's first recollection of O. P. Heggie probably will date back to his appearance on the stage of the Belasco Theater years ago in the role of Androcles in George Bernard Shaw's play of "Androcles and the Lion."

But to revert to "Anne of Green Gables."

This homely subject, it seems to me, may best be summarized as a completely wholesome family picture, produced, directed and acted with punctilious care against rural backgrounds of uncommon beauty, which can be relied upon to draw a tear to balance each of its laughs and leave a final impression of warm human interest and irresistible heart appeal.

If the theatergoing public retains any regard whatever for those gentle emotions that have made such plays as "The Old Homestead," "Shore Acres," "Mrs. Wiggs," "Little Women" and others of like ilk, then "Anne of Green Gables" should be an overwhelming popular favorite.

Contrary to earlier announcements, incidentally, "Anne of Green Gables," instead of opening at RKO-Keith's on Thanksgiving Day, will begin its engagement on Fifteenth street tomorrow morning. This decision was reached by the New York high command at the eleventh hour, and was not made public until yesterday afternoon. It is a picture, happily, which it is possible to recommend for every member of the family from the smallest daughter to grandma and grandpa—and they all probably will enjoy it equally.

Miss Cornell Prepares.

Because of the elaborate technical nature of Joe Melziner's settings for Katharine Cornell's production of Will Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," it has been necessary to rent a New York theater for two weeks' scene, light and dress rehearsals, in order to insure swiftness in changing the 23 scenes in actual performance.

These rehearsals, so I am told by the faithful, Mr. Ray Henderson, Miss Cornell's helpful stentor, are strictly private, no one except those immediately concerned in the production being permitted to be present.

Although to the playgoer's eye the settings reveal a great simplicity, to achieve this effect, Mielziner calls for a stage 70 feet wide and 30 feet deep, with a proscenium opening 36 feet in height.

Jo Mielziner, in case you had forgotten, is a brother of Kenneth MacKenna, the actor now appearing in the role of the playwright who progresses backward from middle age to youth in "Merrily We Roll Along," now playing at the Music Box Theater in New York. He was formerly the husband of Kay Francis, the motion picture star.

Upon invading the office of Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran at the National Theater last Sabbath afternoon, whom should one encounter but Stanley Ridges, former leading man of the National Theater Players! Mr. Ridges, it will be recalled, was a member of the cast of Maxwell Anderson's "Mary of Scotland," with Helen Hayes and Philip Merivale, last season. This season he continues with the Theater Guild as an important member of the cast of "Valley Forge," the new Maxwell Anderson play at the National, in which Philip Merivale again appears in the principal male role, with Margalo Gillmore opposite.

Death-in-the-Afternoon Note.

Today at noon, just to keep the parade in motion, they are previewing United Artists' picturization of Tolstoi's "Resurrection," with Anna Sten and Fredric March in the costellar roles. Sam Goldwyn's version bears the title of "We Live Again."

Unless we can squeeze in a wink or two of sleep, I wouldn't be too sure about living again—or even yet!

Plays Lead in New Guild Drama

A new portrait study of Margalo Gillmore, brilliant young actress who appears in the leading feminine role of the Theater Guild's production of Maxwell Anderson's new drama of the American Revolution, "Valley Forge," which was presented for the first time in Washington in the National Theater last night. The role of George Washington in the new play is wisely intrusted to Philip Merivale, who scored last season in the same author's "Mary of Scotland."

Lyle Talbot and Margaret Lindsay Are Teamed Again; A New Set-up Is Planned for Rogers' Next; Inside Tips From Filmdom's Capital.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 26.—Success of "Fog Over Frisco" is causing Lyle Talbot and Margaret Lindsay to be brought together again as a team. They will have the romantic leads in "While the Patient Sleeps." Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon, who are pretty well established as a starring duo, have the primary character parts, which are "the" parts.

KATHARINE HEPBURN.

Talbot and Miss Lindsay also have appeared in "The Dragon Murder Case," but when it comes to actors' opportunities, a mystery story is just a mystery story.

Hepburn Lauded in Adams Role.

Inside information is that Katharine Hepburn will probably score her biggest hit in "The Little Minister," now being completed. It is being heralded as of the same class, if not better than, "Little Women."

Miss Hepburn needs such a picture to renew her success. "Spitfire" was hit and miss, even though it made money, and Katharine's stage venture was ill-timed and ill-starred.

She is to stick diligently to screen work, it would appear, as preparations are already on for "The Gorgeous Hussy."

New Rogers Set-up.

Will Rogers will have a new contract when he begins working on "Life Begins at Forty," and arrangements are being made to surround the star with an entirely different cast.

Heretofore, it has been the plan to group the same people in a Rogers production. Irene Rich once carried the feminine leads regularly, and more recently Louise Dresser. Evelyn Venable has been the young girl heroine in two pictures. This time they may be hiring Garbo to play opposite Will, the results aimed at being such a departure.

"Sequoia" (Preview) On West Coast.

Undoubtedly the finest nature study ever brought to the screen, "Sequoia," is an unusual production. If it does not enter the list for a film academy award, there are no true-hearted observers of things cinematic in the colony itself.

The stars aren't names in the familiar sense of the word. They are a deer (or several doubling in the leading role) and a puma. A big palm goes to Chester Franklin and his assistants for the friendship they were able to induce between these two natural enemies.

Film Pageant in Review.

Absence of gruesomeness in "Dante's Inferno" is being guaranteed by Fox. The picture is being aimed at the youngster as well as the grown-up.

Title of "Black Hell" has been changed to "Black Fury." It's the censorship.

Quest for a player to portray the role of an actress in the movies who is trying to make a comeback (needed for "Private Beach") is fairly strenuous. And isn't that funny in Hollywood?

Director Clarence Brown, who just returned from Europe, is to guide "Wife Versus Secretary," by Faith Baldwin, with William Powell, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy in the cast.

Slaying Probe To Open Today

4 Persons Are Accused in Girls' Deaths.

Covington, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—Commonwealth's Attorney C. C. Collins said tonight that, weather permitting, Judge Benjamin Haden, of Fincastle, would convene a special grand jury in the Alleghany County Circuit Court here tomorrow to investigate the slaying of two white girls near Clifton Forge on Sunday, November 18.

Philip Jones, his wife, Nannie; Chester Smith and John Pryor, of Clifton Forge, colored, are being held in connection with the murder of Alice Hill, 13, and her sister, Ellen, 7. The prisoners were taken to the Henrico County Jail in Richmond for safekeeping. Authorities have said Jones has confessed he alone killed the children, absolving the other Negroes.

The weather tonight indicated snow, in which case it was believed unlikely a grand jury would be called. Mr. Collins has not indicated how many indictments he would ask. He said, however, he would present all the evidence to the grand jury which would decide how many of the prisoners would be indicted.

New Hospital May Be Furnaceless.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—The new Washington County Hospital, now under construction, may be furnaceless.

Trustees of the hospital and city commissioners will confer tomorrow as to the advisability of constructing a steam line from the municipal electric light plant to the hospital, a distance of 3,000 feet, heating the building in this manner.

City officials believe such a system would result in economy and are prepared to submit cost sheets at the conference.

Card Party Planned For Benefit of School

A card party will be given tonight at the Laurel (Md.) Elementary School for the benefit of the new high school annex. Proceeds will be used to purchase furniture for the teacher's rest room.

The new school building is expected to be completed in December. The grounds are being graded and the finishing touches are being added to the interior of the building.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

THREE members of the Senate Appropriations Committee have indicated that they favor restoration of the remaining 5 per cent of Government pay as of January 1, according to the American Federation of Government Employes. Senator Copeland's name is reported to have been added to the list, now consisting of Senators McCarran, Nye and Thomas of Oklahoma.

BAKER.

Following the general conference Friday of representatives of organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, held with Senator McCarran, on the pay restoration, a committee composed of Leo E. George, president, and William Ottee, secretary-treasurer, of the National Federation of Post-office Clerks, and of Col. Charles I. Stengle, representing the AFGE, met again yesterday with E. Claude Babcock, AFGE president, to discuss ways and means of bringing about pay restoration as of January 1.

It was agreed, Mr. Babcock said, that a measure to restore pay will be introduced as soon as posible, and that every effort will be made to have restoration retroactive to January 1.

Under the law, it was pointed out, whereby a 10 per cent pay restoration was achieved last session, a blanket appropriation is provided covering the amount of any restoration that may be made, so no new appropriation legislation would be needed. The problem is simply that of eliminating the provision under which the cut is made.

Employes in estate tax division, Internal Revenue, are happy on receiving word from Mrs. Florence C. Hunt that she is recovering from serious injuries suffered in an automobile accident. Mrs. Hunt is in a hospital at Charleston, W. Va., and hopes to be taken to her home this week.

Dr. Ezekiel will talk on "Economic Planning in Relation to Agriculture." Dr. Wilson's topic has not been announced. The series of meetings will run through the winter and will serve to acquaint the employes with the various functions of the department.

Dr. W. R. Gregg, director of the Weather Bureau, is scheduled to be the principal speaker at the third meeting in the series on December 5.

Sea Serpent Fear Upset; Only Shark Found Off Island

Nanimo, B. C., Nov. 26 (AP).—The sea serpent was only a shark.

Dr. W. A. Clemens, director of the biological station here, today identified the remains of a "sea monster" found on Herny Island, south of Prince Rupert, B. C., as those of a basking shark.

The basking or wax-nosed shark, "ceterhinus maximux," measures up to 36 feet in length, with the greatest diameter about 4 feet, Dr. Clemens said.

Navy Coach Sees Hard-Fought Victory Over Army

Duke Places Five Players On Team

North Carolina Is Given Three, N. C. State and V. P. I. One Each.

Generals, Near Title, Fail to Get a Man on First Eleven.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—A hefty, fast-charging line and a fast, fairly heavy back field compose the 1935 all-Southern Conference football team.

Sports writers and coaches who participated in the annual poll gave five places on the all-star eleven to Duke players and placed three members of North Carolina's great team. Maryland, V. P. I. and N. C. State are represented by a single player.

Conspicuously absent from the line-up are members of the Washington and Lee eleven which will meet South Carolina Thursday at Columbia with the Southern Conference championship the Generals' prize if they win. The Generals' well-rounded strength, however, is shown by their heavy representation on second and third elevens.

Players and Votes.

These are the players who made the team and the votes they received:

Ends—Earle Wentz, Duke (38); Dave Thomas, V. P. I. (20).

Tackles—Jim Tatum, North Carolina (31); Gus Durner, Duke (19).

Center—Steve Sabol, N. C. State (23).

Quarter back—Clarence Parker, Duke (25).

No Question About Barclay.

There never was any question that George Barclay, the circuit's outstanding lineman, would be on the all-star team. The only question, apparently, is whether he'll be on the roll of honor when the All-American team is announced.

Coaches, opposing players and most of the sports scribes agreed Barclay was good enough for All-Southern, All-American, or all-everything, for that matter. He was given a first-team vote by every coach and sports writer with the exception of one scribe who picked only players he watched this season and he never had an opportunity to see North Carolina in action. Barclay, by virtue of his heavy polling, captains the Associated Press All-Southern Conference eleven, nosing out Duke's ball carrier, Corky Cornelius, by a few votes.

Sothoron at Full Back.

Norwood Sothoron, Maryland's fast and sensational back, is listed in a strange position on the all-star team, at full back. Somebody, however, had to play full back on this eleven and Sothoron, who is an excellent defensive back, in addition to his ability as a ball carrier, was given the job when it developed that none of the bona fide full back candidates landed among the first four backs in the balloting. Cornelius might have been a better choice for full back, and the All-Southern Conference coach has full authority to make the shift.

So, Jack Alexander, Duke's line-pounding full back, who received 22 votes, was moved to the second team, promoting Clarence Parker, Duke quarter back, to the first eleven. Parker, the only sophomore in the all-Star line-up, polled 25 votes.

All But Three Seniors.

Reducing it all to satistics, the all-Southern Conference football player lacks a fraction of an inch of being 6 feet tall, he weighs 182 pounds and is old enough to vote. All are seniors with the exception of Parker, a sophomore, and a couple of juniors, Gus Durner, Duke's fine tackle, and Steve Sabol, of North Carolina State, who slipped into the center's berth after a spirited tussle with E. B. Dunlap, of Duke.

Sabol, a rangy, husky lad, won with only a couple of votes to spare in the most closely contested race with George Glynn, Washington and Lee's fine snapper-back and Jack Zimmerman, of V. M. I., joining Dunlop in disputing Sabol's superiority.

Coaches and sports writers in their balloting, paid tribute to one of the finest flocks of ends the conference has produced in some time. Wentz, a second-stringer on the 1934 team, ran away with the race, but Dave Thomas, Virginia Tech's sterling flankman, who fell injured in the fourth quarter of his game with N. C. State, after perhaps the finest exhibition of his career, barely nosed out six other contestants—every one evidence a recognized star.

McBride Is Recalled By Giants for 2 Games

New York, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The New York Giants have recalled Jack McBride, back field ace from Paterson to help them in their remaining two games of the National professional football league season.

The Giants need one victory to clinch the Eastern division title and McBride will be in the line-up against Brooklyn Thursday. He will get his first workout with the Giants tomorrow morning.

Kansas' '99 Phantom Admits He Was Ringer

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 26 (AP).—The "phantom tackle" of Kansas University who helped defend the Midwest football title against Missouri in 1899 today told why he "disappeared" after the game instead of going back to the Lawrence campus to the hero's welcome that awaited him.

George R. Krebs, 60 now, and a mining engineer, sat behind his drawing board and chuckled.

"You see," he said, "I wasn't the green farm boy from Colorado that I was supposed to be.

"They said I didn't know anything about football until that season in Kansas. Well, maybe not, but I had played for five years at West Virginia University and on a professional team in Latrobe, Pa.

"One year at West Virginia I was captain of the team, and two years I played side by side with Fielding Yost. And Yost was coaching the Kansas team when I went out there. Sure, I knew he was there; he sent for me."

Krebs was a sensation in that Kansas-Missouri game and his disappearance caused a furore that has built about him a tradition of mystery.

"It was all right for professionals to play on college teams in those days," he said. "They all had professionals. The only rule was that the player had to be matriculated at the college. I really was graduated from West Virginia, even though I had played professional football between college seasons. And I matriculated at Kansas, too—long enough for the three games I was to play in.

Just Came Home.

"But disappeared?" he asked with a grin. "I don't know what you mean. After that game in Columbia, Mo., I just caught a train and came home to the job that was waiting for me. Football was over and there wasn't anything else out there for me to do."

Reams have been written about the "Colorado farm boy" who made football history that day as Yost's Kansas eleven beat Missouri for the Midwest title.

"At Kansas, I matriculated as a farm boy from somewhere in Colorado—I don't remember exactly where, but some hick place. I had to be from somewhere, didn't I?

"Well, it was October and the season was already well under way, so at first I just ambled around the campus, stumbling over my own feet, and it was easy to pass for a farm boy. I looked like one.

"Then I went out for the team, and Yost put me on the scrubs. I just stumbled around and when the ball came to me I'd be awkward, let it hit my chest and bounce off.

Quickly there followed the Nebraska and Washburn games which Kansas won by big margins. Then the big game—Missouri, for the title. Kansas won, 34 to 6.

"Two of those Missouri men who played against me we carried off on stretchers," Krebs said. "But the third one was pretty good. He finished the game.

Western Beats Gonzaga by 27-0 Score

Runs Up 21 Points in Final Period to Bring Its Season to Close.

WESTERN HIGH turned a close football game into a rout in the last quarter yesterday, soundly spanking its old rival, Gonzaga, 27 to 0, at Western Stadium.

The victory brought a highly successful season to a close for Western, in which it was defeated only by the all-powerful Techmen and by Newport News High, 6 to 0.

Conzaga, conqueror of Eastern, put up a tough fight yesterday, and the game was actually much closer than the score indicates. After taking a 6-to-0 lead in the first half through a Gonzaga fumble, the Georgetowners were forced to fight off a determined attack by the Purple, which fell 2 yards short of tying the score in the third quarter.

Western ran up 21 points in the final period, one touchdown coming after a fumbled punt by Gonzaga, one on an intercepted pass and the third as the indirect result of an intercepted pass.

9 U. S. Teams Undefeated, Untied

Minnesota, Alabama Only Major Elevens With Perfect Records.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—Rice, Cape Girardeau Teachers, of Missouri, and Tusculum of Tennessee, all had fallen off the undefeated football list today, leaving nine teams which have won all their games and 12 others which have escaped defeat but have been tied.

Minnesota and Alabama are the only major teams in the "perfect class," while Stanford, Temple, Western Maryland, Louisiana State and the Utah Aggies are the major elevents tied but not beaten.

Two small college arrays, Pennsylvania Military College and Ohio Northern, alone have blanked the opposition in every game. Minnesota's 270 points in eight games set the scoring pace for the undefeated outfits.

Kerr Denies Report of Going to Harvard.

Hamilton, N. Y., Nov. 26 (U.P.). Andy Kerr, head coach of Colgate University's football team, tonight denied published reports that he had been offered the job as successor to Eddie Casey as chief pilot at Harvard.

"There have been no negotiations between me and Harvard officials," Kerr said. "I am sorry to spoil a good story, but truthfully I haven't even been approached on the subject."

Stanford U. Gets Bowl Bid

For Second Consecutive Year Team Will Represent West.

PASADENA, Calif., Nov. 26 (AP).—Stanford was selected today to carry the banner of the West into the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day. Speculation began at once as to the football team the Indians will name as an opponent.

Stanford was the standout aggregation of the Pacific Coast, its record unmarred except for an early season 7-7 tie with Santa Clara. The Pacific Coast conference apparently found little trouble in nominating it for the second successive year. But no such clarity of thought exists in regard to the opponent.

Alabama Out in First.

Alabama, three times a Rose Bowl visitor, and a very successful one at that, appears to have rallied the strongest support locally, but there also is a quartet of strong Eastern contenders in Colgate, Columbia, Temple and Pitt, to say nothing of Louisiana State twice tied, but with an ardent supporter in its Kingfish-Senator-Patron, Huey Long.

It is almost a foregone conclusion that Minnesota will not receive consideration because of a Big Ten rule against post season games.

Alabama and Minnesota are the only major gridiron teams of the season without defeats or ties and eliminating the "Big Ten" champions would seem to direct the choice to the Southerners were it not for some potent sentimental reasons.

The case for the Eastern possibilities may be stated as follows:

Columbia Is Victor.

Columbia last New Year's defeated Stanford in the rain 7-0. The Indians would like a chance to erase that memory. Columbia was beaten this year only by Navy, but last year it was chosen despite a reverse at the hands of Princeton.

Colgate has lost to Ohio State's strong eleven, 10-7. It is coached by Andy Kerr, who once coached at Stanford to pave the way for Glenn (Pop) Warner, and his remark of several years ago when Colgate was passed up as a Rose Bowl team for Pittsburgh is still bandied about on the Pacific Coast. At that time Kerr said: "Unbeaten, untied, unscored on, and uninvited."

Temple has only a 6-6 tie with Indiana against it, but a strong reason for bidding the Philadelphia school is that it was to Temple that Warner went when he left Stanford two years ago.

Pittsburgh's only reverse was at the hands of Minnesota, 13-7, but there is a distinct bond with Stanford in that Jock Sutherland, the Pitt coach, played side by side with Claude (Tiny) Thornhill, Stanford coach, when both were linemen at Pittsburgh.

Louisiana Is Out.

Louisiana State's 9-9 tie with Rice, and 14-14 deadlock with Southern Methodist University have served to minimize the chances of the Southern outfit.

Returning to Alabama, a glance at the records shows the Crimson Tide has performed better in the Rose Bowl than any other invader, defeating Washington, 20-19, in 1926, tying Stanford, 7-7, in 1927, and crushing Washington State, 24-0, in 1931.

Aside from its tie with Alabama, Stanford in the Rose Bowl lost to Notre Dame with its "Four Horsemen," 27-10, in 1925, defeated Pittsburgh, 7-6, in 1928, and lost to Columbia last year.

Stanford this year won undisputed claim to the Pacific Coast Conference title, and bowled over Oregon State, Northwestern, Southern California, U. C. L. A., Washington, and California.

Middie Team Is Aided by Respite

Offensive Scrimmage Is on Annapolis Menu This Afternoon.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 26 (AP).—One of the hardest fought Army-Navy games in the long series that began in 1890 is expected by Tom Hamilton, head Middie coach, when the service rivals clash in their thirty-fifth contest Saturday on Franklin Field, Philadelphia.

Hamilton and a group of Navy Varsity coaches were in the Yankee Stadium when Notre Dame defeated the Army, 12 to 6. Commenting today on the play of the West Pointers, the Navy coach said:

"Army has the best team in many years, regardless of its defeat. It has a hard charging line and good backs. We think we have one of our best Navy Teams, and the game between the two elevens should be one of the hardest fought in years.

Confident of Victory.

"I expect a hard-hitting, bruising game. Our men are ready for the battle of their lives and we are going up there to win. I think we can."

The Navy coaching staff feels that the outcome of the game is an "even bet." The Navy players are in good shape and will enter the contest after a week-end rest. Army, on the other hand, has just come through its hard fight against the heavy rambler eleven.

Continuing the program of scrimmage which occupied the Navy players four days last week, Hamilton today put the varsity against the "Army" team, which ran West point plays. This team, made up of Navy varsity squad players, wears Army jerseys and numbers, and the names of the Army players.

Polish Up Plays.

Before the scrimmage the Navy coaches spent considerable time giving individual instructions to the players, and worked polishing the Navy plays and formations for the game. After the field work the team assembled for "skull practice."

Hamilton plans to start Dusty Dornin and Bob Mandelkorn, ends; Beppo Lambert and Slade Cutter, tackles; Dave Zabriskie and Dick Burns, guards; Lou Robertshaw, center, and the regular back field of Buzz Borries, Dick Pratt, Tom King and Bill Clark.

The team will have an offensive scrimmage tomorrow, a light defensive scrimmage Wednesday, and leave Thursday night after a light workout, for the Manufacturers Country Club, Oreland, Pa. The players will stay at the club until just before game time.

Miami Is Seeking Penn State Game

New Year's Tilt, However, Considered Unlikely.

Miami, Fla., Nov. 26 (AP).—Dr. B. F. Ashe, president of the University of Miami, said today he had been in correspondence for several weeks with officials of Penn State relative to a football game here New Year's Day.

He said if the Hurricanes play a New Year's Day game it would be against Penn State, but added that it is doubtful if they would play this year.

City officials, following receipt of word from Louisiana State authorities that it would be impossible for them to accept an invitation to the Orange Blossom game here on that date, are expected to invite Duke University early this week to represent the South in the proposed grid classic.

Fear Lund Suffered Broken Rib Is Allayed

Minneapolis, Nov. 26 (AP).—Capt. Francis (Pug) Lund, mainspring of the championship Minnesota football team, was in the university infirmary today, but X-ray pictures disclosed he suffered only severe bruises in the Wisconsin game Saturday.

It had been feared he had a broken rib.

Wrong Stadium, Wrong Team; Zis Aint Fair!

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—This is a favorite situation for the comic cartoonists, but Saturday it actually happened in the Yale Bowl at New Harven.

An hour before the Elis turned back the Harvards in the Big Three climax, a huge fellow, swathed in a raccoon coat, pockets bulging, step unsteady and eyes slightly aslant, came plodding up the all but vacant aisles. In his hat, twisted out of shape and considerably askew, stood a bright orange feather with a big "P" on it.

He sat himself down and organized his paraphernalia around him. He had more equipment for that ball game than Raphael needed paint the Madonna. Once organized, he devoted himself for the first time to his surroundings.

"Come on you Princetons," he muttered hoarsely, testing his voice in the empty stadium.

"Come on," said the man in the raccoon coat firmly, gaining confidence. "Never mind about Yale, let's beat Dartmouth."

He looked around, and no one was disagreeing with him, because no one had gotten there yet. His voice rose with added authority.

"Yeah, Princeton!" he hollered. "Yeah, Tigers. Eat 'em up, boys, eat 'em up."

An echo supported him from across the stadium, and he looked around for the source of possible trouble. He looked again. A kind of incredulous, startled look came into his eyes. He brushed his forehead, look again. From the press box you could see tragic realization creeping over him.

"Where am I?" he said—and paused.

"Where am I?" he demanded again, in a half wail that started the echoes once more.

He looked up to the press box.

"Zis ain't Palmer Stadium," he announced belligerently. "Where's Palmer Stadium? Where's Princeton? Where's Dartmouth? Zis 's Yale. What'm I doin' here?"

No one knew, so he tried brokenly to explain. He had gone down to a railroad station, Pennsylvania Station leading to Princeton he thought, and had gotten on a football special with a lot of fire, exciting people who were going to a football game, Princeton-Dartmouth, he thought. Actually he had gone to Grand Central Station, had gotten on a football special all right, but a Harvard-Yale special. He was heart-broken.

"Waddeya think of that?" He muttered. "I'm a good Princeton man. I see Yale beat 'em last week. I wanna have revenge. I wanna see Princeton Tigers eat up Dartmouth. 'N here I am. Nothin' but Yale again."

He consoled himself with his packages. He protested all the time Yale was beating Harvard, with him having to watch. But when last seen, in the fourth quarter, he was still rooting for Princeton.

Star Porter Overtakes Field to Win Edward Andros Handicap at Bowie Track

Sprints Six Furlongs in 1:13 1-5

Patchpocket Makes Valiant Attempt but Loses by Half Length.

By Walter Haight.

ELMER TRUEMAN, Washington trainer, sent a fit Star Porter to the post at Bowie yesterday and the gelded son of The Porter and Starella won the Edward Andros Handicap. The 6-furlong sprint drew the best of the short-distance horses quartered at the track and, despite the slow time of 1:13 1-5, it was an interesting contest.

The race developed into a duel between Star Porter and Patchpocket in the closing stages and the Ral Par color bearer stuck to his guns long enough to win by a half-length margin. Trumpery, the C. V. Whitney hope, was third in the field of six.

Red Wagon Sets Pace.

Red Wagon, as is his custom, rolled out in front soon after the break followed by Happy Go and Captain Argo. Star Porter was last and Patchpocket next to last. Happy Go and Red Wagon ran themselves into the ground on the turn for the stretch and Star Porter, taken to the outside by Jockey Bejshak, began the rush that was to take him to the top. Meade, on Patchpocket, elected to go through the field and met with interference. When he was finally in racing room, Star Porter was burning oil in front. Meade sent Patchpocket after the leader and made up ground through the last eighth, but Star Porter clung to his advantage in the closing yards.

Aileen C. Wins by Nose.

Aileen C. took the day's opener by a nose from Cantersine, according to the judges, who disagreed with the backers of the second horse. It was a nip and tuck finish, with Cantersine closing fast on the tiring leader. Squeeze Out was third, two lengths in back of the battle for first money. The winner paid $26.80. Miss Snow, the favorite, was away poorly.

Bay Sister, an E. R. Bradley representative, graduated from the maiden ranks in the second race. As usual, Meade had the mount and came from back in the field to defeat Happy Flag by three lengths. Balapin, a field horse, was third. The winner was the second choice, at 2 to 1.

Hermie Roy Comes Back.

Hermie Roy, a horse that was soundly trounced here last week in 1:51, came back over the same mile and a sixteenth course to be timed in 1:50 2-5 while winning by eight lengths under easy handling. Deedie was second and Sound Money third in the field of 12. The wise money played on Hermie Roy brought a return of $10.30.

Boston Brook and Judge Blake fought it out for the purse in the fourth race, finishing in the order named and a nose apart. Haines and Meade were the riders and it was a keen struggle, which began soon after the start of the mile and 70 yards test. Moralist, the favorite, was third. Boston Brook rewarded at a $21 mutuel.

Law Suit added to the discomfiture of the talent with a poor effort in the sixth race. Old Field, paying better than 3-to-1, drove home a half-length before Campagna. The latter beat Law Suit by two lengths for the place. Tightwad stole a long lead and stopped, leaving the issue up to Old Field and Campagna. Law Suit fell back early and although he closed fast, the handicap was too great.

Syriac won the last event by two lengths from Renovah, the favorite. Just Cap was third. The winner paid $29.40.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—AILEEN C., $26.80, $15.60, $8.10; CANTERSINE, $4.50, $4.00; SQUEEZE OUT, $5.30.

AILEEN C, forcing a steady pace while following in close pursuit of PROTRACTOR, took command when entering the home stretch, responded nicely when placed to punishment and just lasted to stall off CANTERSINE. Latter gained stoutly after holding a forward position and was wearing the winner down at every stride near-ing the finish. SQUEEZE OUT, shuffled back when leaving the back stretch, came when finding racing room and closed stoutly. BROADWAY LIGHTS, knocked back after the start, settled in his stride and closed with a rush. MISS SNOW broke slowly. She closed with a belated rush after a slow beginning. KALOLA went well in the early stages. PROTRACTOR stopped badly after losing command.

BAY SISTER, much the best, broke well, but dropped back going to the first turn. She settled in her stride after reaching the back stretch, wore HAPPY FLAG down without effort when reaching the home stretch, then finished under strong restraint. HAPPY FLAG followed FAN closely in the early stages, took command, but was unable to meet the winner's rush. BALAPIN bettered his position on the outside and finished gamely. SCOTTYS PRIDE weakened during the stretch drive. CANIMAR was unable to threaten. COURT GOSSIP was held safe. MISS ALPHONSO went up on the inside midway of the back stretch, but could not reach the leaders. MIRA stopped, as did FAN.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HERMIE ROY, $10.30, $4.60, $3.90; DEEDIE, $3.10, $2.60; SOUND MONEY, $5.30.

HERMIE ROY sprinted into a clear lead when reaching the back stretch, met a persistent effort from DEEDIE at the final elbow, then drew out at will during the final stages. DEEDIE chased closest to the winner from the start, but weakened badly in the last quarter-mile. SOUND MONEY came with good courage on the outside after bettering her position gradually. SUN ABBOT failed to rally after entering a contending position. TRIOLET was unable to enter contention. GALORIC went well for six furlongs. FLYING DON was done early. DODORUS stopped. McDONALD H ran off a mile after the finish, and SMALL PLAY two miles.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The John Sevgour. For all ages. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:46. Off at 2:51. Winner, H. R. Dickens' br. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOSTON BROOK, $21.00, $8.80, $2.80; JUDGE BLAKE, $5.90, $2.60; MORALIST, $2.30.

BOSTON BROOK, strongly handled after taking command in the last half-mile, responded nicely when straightened into the home stretch and just lasted under severe pressure. JUDGE BLAKE, kept close to the winner after losing the lead, came determinedly under punishment through the final drive. MORALIST, bumped and knocked off stride at the first turn, entered contention on the outside when reaching the final turn while under severe punishment and then closed gamely. PROUD GIRL could not better her position after going smoothly in the early racing. TANGERLOO was held safe. STEGAL went well for the first six furlongs.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Edward Andros Handicap. For all ages. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:18. Off at 3:21½. Winner, R. Parr's ch. g. (6), by The Porter—Starella. Trained by E. Trueman. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:13 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STAR PORTER, $6.70, $3.30, $2.50; PATCHPOCKET, $3.40, $2.70; TRUMPERY, $4.10.

STAR PORTER, kept on the outside of the leaders, moved up fast when reaching the turn, drew into a clear lead when straightened into the home stretch, but had to be shaken up to withstand PATCHPOCKET. Latter worked his way up on the outside, lost ground at the stretch turn, but finished full of run. TRUMPERY, a keen factor from the beginning, weakened after making a bold effort approaching the home stretch. POMPEIUS lacked early speed and was never a factor. RED WAGON had much speed early, but tired in the last quarter-mile. CAPTAIN ARGO went strongly for a half-mile. HAPPY GO was rushed off his feet in the early stages, then stopped.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward (foaled in Maryland). Start good. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 3:48. Off at 3:50. Winner, Mrs. E. J. Chambers' ch. g. (4), by Sedgefield—Bettsy Barth. Trained by H. Chambers. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 2-5, 0:50 1-5, 1:16 2-5, 1:43, 1:50 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OLD FIELD, $8.10, $3.40, $2.20; CAMPAGNA, $3.70, $2.30; LAW SUIT, $2.20.

OLD FIELD, handling his weight nicely and following closest to the pace maker in the early stages, came willingly when reaching the home stretch, wore CAMPAGNA down in the closing sixteenth and was under pressure at the end. CAMPAGNA raced close up from the beginning, but faltered after gaining a slight lead. LAW SUIT was taken back directly after the break and went along under his own courage the entire trip. TIGHT WAD was used up setting the early pace. LIGHT BREEZE was overmatched.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good, for all but Once. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:18. Off at 4:22½. Winner, F. Hayes' br. g. (7), by Flying Ebony—Lexicon. Trained by P. E. Fitzgerald. Value to winner, $435; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $15. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:50 3-5, 1:17 2-5, 1:44, 1:51 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SYRIAC, $29.40, $10.30, $7.70; REVONAH, $4.40, $3.30; JUST CAP, $4.50.

SYRIAC, showing considerable improvement, and kept within striking distance of the leaders, moved up strongly to challenge the leaders when released from restraint, wore REVONAH down inside the closing furlong and was going away at the end. REVONAH set a steady pace while saving ground and held on well. JUST CAP followed well up and continued gamely under strong urging. RETRIBUTION was going willingly in the closing drive. GENERAL LEJUNE lacked early speed and was never a factor. SALISBURY was away slowly. DARK MISSION tired. ONCE was left.

Lord Jim Goes At Auction This Week

Sale Is Under Way Today; 300 Yearlings Will Be Included.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—Lord Jim, winner of the Hambletonians, returns to the point from which his racing career started this week when he goes under the auctioneer's hammer at the fortieth annual Old Glory sale at Squadron A Armory. As a yearling consigned to the Old Glory sale by the Walnut Hall Farm, of Donerail, Ky., Lord Jim was sold to E. L. Mefford, of Columbus, Ohio, for $575. That would hardly buy a look at him this week, when he comes back as the first Hambletonian winner ever to be sold at the Old Glory auction.

The three-day sale, starting tomorrow, is expected to bring out about 300 yearlings from the leading breeding farms for trotters and pacers and a number of proven racers in addition to Lord Jim. Among them are the speedy 3-year-old filly, Emily Stokes, owned by C. W. Phellis, of New York; Raider, a top-notch pacer, and Reynolda, owned by Henry H. Knight, of Chicago; Ben White's Madelon, and E. Roland Harriman's Calumet Eleanor.

Forty Golfers Are Expected to Compete in Pro-Amateur at Kenwood Today

Indian Spring Team Big Favorite

Diffenbaugh-Peacock to Seek Top Prize; Stars Are Entered.

A FIELD of 40 golfers, including some of the best players in the Middle Atlantic section, will compete today in an 18-hole pro-amateur tournament sponsored by Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

PEACOCK.

Al Houghton, Kenwood pro, is in charge of the tournament. A $2.50 entrance fee is being assessed each participant. The money will be pooled, and prizes will be awarded for low gross and low net. There will be close to $100 in prizes if the expected field shows up.

Diffenbaugh-Peacock Favored.

Going to the post as the odds-on favorites will be the Indian Spring combination of George Diffenbaugh, pro, and Roger Peacock, Maryland State amateur title holder. They have won practically all of the outstanding pro-amateur events held this season, and veteran observers see no reason why they can't continue the monopoly today. Peacock was low amateur in the National Capital Open and low in the Maryland Open, in which Peacock again led the Simon-pures.

Of course, there will be 19 other teams that will have something to say about winning. Houghton, who has scored as low as 62 for Kenwood, and Maury Fitzgerald are particularly dangerous. Mel Shorey, of East Potomac, and Gene Vinson, of Manor, District title holder, loom as another formidable twosome. A one-time familiar figure, Sandy Armour, former Congressional pro, will play with Luther C. Steward, jr., of Congressional.

Fred McLeod, the Columbia master, and Albert Mackenzie, former Middle Atlantic title holder, will team up, as will Walter Cunningham, Burning Tree pro, and Raymond (Sonny) Workman, well-known jockey.

Baltimore Pairs Enter.

Al C. Nelson, 99-20—79; Dink Ward, 99-20—79, and R. A. Carr, 79 (no handicap), yesterday were declared the winners in the Turkey Blind Bogey Tournament at Anacostia's course.

William J. LaBille, Beaver Dam's hard plugging golfer, has conquered the 352-yard eleventh hole at his course, once his jinx hole. In his morning round Sunday he ran down a 15-footer for a birdie. In the afternoon, he holed out a 125-yard mashie niblick for an eagle deuce. The hole measures 352 yards.

Fred McLeod and William Wade Hinshaw, the former Metropolitan Opera singer, who play Columbia together each morning, weather permitting, are about the fastest combination that ever hit this way. They have played 18 holes in one hour and 35 minutes for a record non-stop flight at the course. On the occasion of this record tour, Hinshaw did a 33 on the incoming side after going out in 41. Yes—they played from the front tees.

Prizes will be presented the winners in the Rock Creek Turkey Tournament today by Manager Harry Graham. Claude Rippy, who defeated Harold Bowers, one up in Sunday's finals, will receive two gobblers, since he also was medalist.

Fred H. Brooke, Washington, was elected assistant football manager and in 1936 will automatically succeed John F. Byers, Pittsburgh, as manager.

Covelli Bows To De Grasse On Points

Majority of 18,000 Crowd Disagrees With Verdict; Burl Is Winner.

PETE DE GRASSE, Canadian Indian, was awarded a split decision over Frankie Covelli after 10-rounds of fast and furious featherweight fisticuffing at the Riding and Hunt Club last night.

Referee Denny Hughes voted for Covelli, Judges Howard Livingston and Jack Dunn balloted for the Red Skin. The Post score sheet showed Covelli with 39½ points to De Grasse's 35½. Most of the 1,800 spectators thought De Grasse came out on the right end of another wrong Washington decision.

Burl Beats Nicco.

Eddie Burl took a unanimous decision from Dominick Nicco, Covelli's spare mate, in a fast and furious 6-round semifinal. The Jacksonville jarrer was improved even over his last good fight and he swarmed over Nicco from the opening bell. Burl set Nick down twice with left hooks, once in the first for a two count and again in the second for a seven count.

Jimmy Reed clowned his way to a unanimous decision over Joe Morro, of New York, in an amusing welterweight 6-rounder. The Jacksonville harlequin fought his usual fight all the way, beating Morrow as much by leering and making faces at him as by punching.

Joe Ferrone Wins.

Joe Ferrone, Buzzer Ryan's welterweight prospect, won on a second-round technical knockout from Tiger Jim Phelps in a comic relief bout scheduled for four. Ferrone floored the Quantico clown for a four count, but the Tiger tangled up in the ropes coming off the floor and was so generally befuddled Referee Morris had no alternative but to stop the bout.

Bears Pile Up 257 Points on Gridiron

New York, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The Chicago Bears, while clicking off 11 straight victories this season, hung up a new scoring record for other national football league teams to shoot at.

Green Bay's Packers lead the league for aerial honors with 63 passes completed in 150 attempts. New York is in second place with 45 completed in 121 tries. The Chicago Cardinals are the best defensive outfit. They permitted only 1,473 yards gained against them in 10 games. Detroit, however, has had only 30 points scored against it.

Hoyas to Open Drills Today for Terror Tilt

Georgetown's football squad enjoyed a well-earned rest yesterday after its grueling struggle against Maryland Saturday. Work for Saturday's finale with Western Maryland will begin today.

Mike Chappa, the Hoyas' star end, and Joe Meglen, full back, emerged from the Terrapin fray with injuries and will be out for several days. Chappa may not face the Terrors Saturday because of a badly swollen ankle. Meglen had five stitches taken in the right hand.

Tilden on Belgium's 'Undesirables' List

Brussels, Belgium, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—The Belgium tennis federation tonight announced that William Tilden 2d, professional court star, is among players on its list of "undesirables." Tilden is scheduled to play a series of exhibition matches in Brussels, starting December 2.

Western Stifles Gonzaga Attack as Teams Renew Annual Rivalry

Bill Krause, 220-pound Western tackle (foreground), helping to stop Malcolm Leubkert, Gonzaga quarter back, for no gain in second quarter of yesterday's game at Western Stadium. Krause's line play and Leubkert's ball carrying were features of the battle.

Colonials Near Attendance Record

Need to Draw Only 4,500 to Oklahoma Game to Equal Mark.

GEORGE WASHINGTON comes to the end of another football season Thursday at the Griffith Ballwick, with the Oklahoma Sooners guest opposition. And although the Colonials have bowed to three opponents their final effort still is important to them.

A victory over Oklahoma would mean that the year has brought as much success as any of its predecessors, and if only 4,500 fans attend the record for attendance at football games in the District established last autumn, 98,000 will have been equaled.

Seven thousand students with an avaricious appetite for football seem to assure a new record at the turnstiles, but the Oklahoma squad in general and one "Cash" Gentry in particular stand squarely in the way of a Colonial victory.

Called One of Best.

Out in the oil country Gentry ranks as one of the greatest kickers of all time from that section and the records bear mute testimony to his greatness. Claude Reeds, Phil White, Ram Morrison and Bob Dunlap were good, too, and all played for the Sooners, but Gentry outranks them.

Against Centenary he got off a 95-yard punt, and kicked one 80 yards in the air against Iowa State. His average for the season hovers around the 50-yard figure.

Last season he was selected on the third Associated Press All-American in addition to numerous other all-star elevens. Contrary to prevailing opinion, he's a tackle, not a back. He merely does the punting for his side, although he can mix a pass in with his kicks and run the ball.

Is Natural Tackle.

A natural tackle, he usually sticks to his tackling with the one exception of when called back to kick. Gentry would rather kick a football than eat.

George Washington practiced yesterday at Tech High School, drilling on a defense to protect the kicker. Coach Pixlee is dissatisfied with the blocking when the punter is backed up against or actually behind his own goal line, not only because of what occurred Friday night, but because this has been one of the team's weaknesses all season.

Vanderbilt Defeat.

Defeat in the Vanderbilt game is directly attributable to a blocked kick, which placed the Commodores in position for their winning score. Pixlee is satisfied that the defense in other phases will stand up with the majority of his opponents.

The Colonials have held all of their rivals, including Vandy and L. S. U., to 20 first downs, amassing 99 of their own. And Tuff Leemans has outgained all of the oppositions' backs by nearly 300 yards. Leemans has gobbled up 999 yards from scrimmage, while all nine opponents have amassed a little more than 600.

MILLER.

Impellittiere Seeks Miller As Referee

Boxing Board Secretary Wanted for Fight With Marty Gallagher.

Having heard rumors of doubtful decisions rendered (rendered meaning to tear apart) in recent bouts here, Lenny long-distanced Promoter Joe Turner requesting Miller as the third man in the ring.

"This bout means too much for us to lose on a bad break on judgment," Harry yodeled into Joe's pancake left ear. "Investigation proves to me that Heinie Miller's the man for the job. Miller, I understand, waived his official status temporarily to work the Gallagher-Galento bout on the police benefit card last summer. He will be doing everybody a great favor if he will accommodate us in this particular instance."

Impellittiere will arrive here late tonight. He immediately will retire to Wardman Park, where a special bed has been constructed to accommodate his 6-foot 7-inch framework.

Gallagher, the other half of the featured 10-rounder, whaled away impressively yesterday while nearing the end of his training siege. He scaled 205 pounds after the workout and may weigh in Friday night at 203 or 204.

Preliminaries backing up the main event book Bob Lowry against Mickey Landis, in an eight-round semifinal. Lou Terry vs. Stumpy Jacobs and Sammy Seaman against Joe Green in twin sixes. Gus Mirman and Deacon Owens will open the show in a four-rounder.

Alex. High Scouts See Gonzaga Play

Alexandria, Va., Nov. 26 (Spl.).—Most of the varsity members of the Alexandria High School football squad accompanied Coach Givens to Western High School today to watch Western in action against Gonzaga, their Turkey Day opponent.

Plans are being completed to make this game the biggest thing in Alexandria's sports history. It has been set aside as the homecoming attraction for Alexandria alumni. A gigantic parade, bonfire and pep rally are scheduled for the eve of the game.

Another feature attraction has been added to the already gala program listed for Thanksgiving afternoon. The Virginia Midgets and Pirate Midgets will meet at 1 o'clock in a preliminary.

The Virginia A. C. has sprung up to challenge the right of the Pirate A. C. to claim the senior championship of the city, by virtue of their win over the St. Ritas, Sunday. The Virginians hold a victory over the Cleveland A. C. and a tie game with the Alcova Motor Co., both clubs which have defeated the Pirates.

Will Speak.

Hamilton, N. Y., Nov. 26 (U.P.).—Coach Jimmy Crowley, of Fordham, and Bill Cunningham, Boston newspaperman, have accepted invitations to speak at the annual varsity "C" banquet at Colgate December 5. The football teams and its coaches and other athletes will be guests of honor.

Park View and Burroughs Winners

Beat Gales and Bowen in Interdivision Soccer Tourney Games.

THE first of the inter-division games of the elementary school soccer tournament sponsored by the Municipal Department of Playgrounds were played yesterday, the finalists of last year's competition, Park View and Burroughs, successfully clearing the initial hurdle by defeating Gales and Bowen, respectively. Park View won, 2-1, and Burroughs triumphed, 2-0.

Experience was the deciding factor in both games.

Extra time was necessary in the Burroughs-Bowen clash. Each side missed scoring from a penalty-kick. This was Bowen's first year in the competition and it won the Hoover division title from a large field of entrants.

Fillmore Victor.

Fillmore qualified to enter the finals by defeating Reservoir, 2-1, thus winning the Georgetown division title, and will meet E. V. Brown tomorrow afternoon on the Georgetown playground field to determine which shall oppose Park View in the Western section playoff.

Blair and Wallach, winners of the Sherwood and Garfield areas, will clash at 3:30 p. m. today on the New York avenue playground field, and the winner will play Burroughs on the some field next Tuesday for the honor of entering the Eastern final.

Bo McMillin Signed Five-Year Contract

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 26 (AP).—The contract that A. N. (Bo) McMillin signed when he came to Indiana University as football coach last spring was for a five-year period, Dr. William Lowe Bryan, university president disclosed today.

Indiana University students celebrated the upset victory of their football team over Purdue throughout the day and McMillin was the recipient of many congratulations.

Athletes Smash 158 Records in '34

New York, Nov. 26 (U.P.).—American athletes turned in 153 record-breaking performances during 1934 for the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States to pass upon at its annual convention in Miami, December 7, 8 and 9.

This was a much more brilliant showing than the list of 119 record claims offered the convention in 1933, according to announcement today by Edwin F. Schaefer, chairman of the A. A. U. record committee.

Hubbell Rated A Baseball Outcast

Giants Reported in Fever in Search of Buyer for Southpaw.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (Spl.).—What's wrong with Carl Hubbell? A year ago the National League's winner of the most valuable player award, and still considered the best southpaw in the National League at the close of the 1934 season, Hubbell today is regarded almost as an outcast.

The first indication that the great Hub had lost something came during the closing days of the summer, when the Giants, with a seven-game lead, began to slip. Players remarked then that Hubbell seemed to have lost his speed; that he had worked too often as both a starting pitcher and in relief roles.

At the minor league meetings in Louisville, Ky., last week, Massa Bill Terry, the Giant manager, further indicated that Hubbell may not be the same old screwball artist that he was a year ago when he offered him in a trade—and was refused!

Today it was learned that, as a result of Terry's seeming eagerness to release his ace southpaw, the Giant office has been in something of a fever seeking a buyer, and hasn't had any luck so far.

The refusal of Pie Traynor, Pirate manager, to take Hubbell for Larry French—a much less-effective southpaw than Hubbell — and Freddy Lindstrom, a veteran of 11 years of baseball campaigning, caused the 900 delegates at Louisville to raise their eyebrows.

It was significant that no other managers came forward with bids for Hubbell's services, although several admitted they were in the market for one or more good pitchers.

Whatever is wrong with Hubbell—if there really is something wrong—only Terry seems to know. But that there is some excellent reason why he has put the Meeker marvel on the auction block is evident by the eagerness with which the Giants are seeking to replace him, preferably with a center fielder.

Terry, himself, indicated that the Giant outfield, where exists the only weakness in the entire line-up will be capably filled by the time the major league meetings, which begin on December 11 are finished. And by then it is firmly believed, Hubbell will have departed for—nobody knows where.

7 at Maryland End Careers Thursday

Only Three Men, Nelson, Sothoron and Simpson, Used Regularly.

THURSDAY'S game with Johns Hopkins at Baltimore marks the final chapter in the collegiate careers of seven Maryland stars, including "South" Sothoron, the Terps' brilliant half back.

Sothoron is one of four ball carriers who will sport the Black and Gold for the last time against the Blue Jays; Earl Widmyer, Dick Nelson and Joe Crecca are the others.

Johnny Simpson, one of the school's greatest guards; Stew McCaw and Luther Goldman, reserve tackles, are the linemen finishing their careers.

Three Used Regularly.

Sothoron, Nelson and Simpson are the only ones of the group who have been used regularly this season. "South" stamped himself as one of the greatest backs turned out at the Old Line school in recent years, while Nelson has been a consistently good triple-threat half back.

Head Coach Jack Faber intends to use all seven against Hopkins, he said yesterday, and four of them will continue athletic activities in other branches of sport throughout the winter.

Boxing Champion.

McCaw is a mainstay of the boxing team and the Southern Conference light-heavyweight champion. Sothoron is a basket ball player of no mean ability; Widmyer is one of the Nation's outstanding sprint stars and Nelson is a slugging shortstop with the baseball team.

Of the 36 men comprising this year's squad, 29 will be back next autumn. So, while Faber is sorry to lose the seven, he realizes things could be much worse.

Londos Victor 8 Times, Not 23, Says Marshall

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—Everett Marshall, the La Junta, Colo., grunt and groan artist, wants the wrestling world to know that Jim Londos has thrown him only 8 times instead of 23.

The Associated Press incorrectly gave the larger figure in reporting their exhibition at Madison Square Garden last Monday night.

Harvey Beats Neusel.

Wembley, England, Nov. 26 (AP). Len Harvey, British heavyweight, and Walter Neusel, of Germany, fought 12 rounds to a draw tonight. Neusel weighed 214 and Harvey 182.

Lou Little Linked in Harvard Coach Rumors

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 (AP).—Grist from the gridiron:

Several major coaching heads are due to be chopped off, to judge from rumors flying around simultaneous with the climax of the college season. The No. 1 report is that Harvard's head coach, Eddie Casey, will tender his resignation within a few weeks, but there's no definite line on a possible successor. It may be significant that Arnold Horween, Chicago business man and former Crimson coach, came back to help the Johnnies prepare for the Yale game.

As usual, the name of Colgate's Andy Kerr, master of the Warner system and the lateral pass, is linked with the prospective opening at Harvard, but Kerr signed a three-year contract with the Red raiders a year ago, after it was persistently reported he would be the next "head man" at yale. Now the Elis are thoroughly satisfied with their new combination of Raymond (Ducky) Pond, an old Blue, and Earle (Greasy) Neale, an old professional campaigner.

Lou Little's name also seems certain to bob up in the discussion about a successor to Casey although it is well known that "Lugubrious Lu" is very well satisfied at Columbia. Little's home is in Leominster, Mass., and his prestige carries great weight in Harvard's "back yard". A section that annually produces a raft of football talent, most of which goes to Dartmouth, Holy Cross, Boston College and the metropolitan New York colleges, including Columbia.

If disastrous seasons are sufficient to stir up the anvil chorus, Harry Kipke, of Michigan, and Frank Carideo, of Missouri, can soon expect to hear demands for their scalps, although in Kipke's case it would appear the Wolverines' otherwise fine record under his coaching is sufficient to keep him on the job.

Beside the Pond-Neale regime at Yale, the best first-year coaching jobs around the collegiate circuit include those performed by Francis Schmidt at Ohio State, Glenn Thistlethwaite at the University of Richmond, Bo McMillin at Indiana, Elmer Layden at Notre Dame, Lynn Waldorf at Kansas State and Jimmie Kitts of Rice.

Schmidt, a surprise choice to take over the Buckeye job, justified his selection by turning out the most successful Ohio State team in years. The only thing that kept it from sharing the Big Ten top with Minnesota's juggernaut was a 1-point defeat by Illinois. It's the feeling of Ohio partisans that the Buckeyes, at the finish, were as good a match for the Gophers as any team in the country. There's no harm in feeling that way, anyhow.

McMillin, after doing a fine job at Kansas State, geared up his "five-man" back field at Indiana sufficiently to hold Pop Warner's otherwise unchecked Temple team to a tie and closed with a sensational upset victory over Purdue. Layden didn't burn up the gridirons with his first Notre Dame team, but victory over the Army has helped convince the vast majority of Irish followers that the "spirit of Rockne" is being recaptured by the erstwhile full back of the four horsemen. Rice came tumbling from its high perch Saturday, beaten by Texas Christian's horned frogs, but this doesn't alter the fact that Kitts turned in one of the year's outstanding coaching jobs, especially as he completely altered the team's attack. Substituting the Warner wing back and short punt formations for the Notre Dame system.

Pop Warner's success in hoisting Temple to a top place among major Eastern teams helps emphasize the fact that 1934 has been and still is an outstanding season for advocates of his gridiron system. Stanford on the West Coast, Rice in the Southwest, Pittsburgh and Colgate in the East, all feature the Warner system. So does the Army, which will make its final stand this Saturday at Philadelphia against the best Navy eleven developed since 1926. The Midshipmen, like Yale and Rice, discarded Notre Dame methods this year in favor of passing and power plays from tandem or "basket" formations.

Stocks Capture Another Point In Recovery

Broad and Active Dealing Is Feature; Sales Up to 1,411,020 Shares.

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—The stock market took another step forward today on its slow climb up the recovery route.

Trading was comparatively broad and active and shifted toward the recently unpopular utility group as industrials encountered some profit-taking.

Setting the best example of rapid recovery for the utilities, American Telephone rallied above 110, compared with its recent low around 100, and finished more than a point up.

Utility Move Aids.

The move by utility interests, banded together in the Edison Electric Institute, to fight Government encroachment in the power industry, evidently heartened the market.

Speculative interest in the power group was stimulated by a spurt of more than a point in North American. The company substituted a quarterly cash dividend of 25 cents a share for 12½ cents cash and 1 per cent in stock it had been paying.

Consolidated Gas stretched its advance to nearly 2 points as fresh buying went into the utilities in late trading.

The financial atmosphere lost none of its cheerfulness over the week-end and most markets drew sustenance from rising business hopes.

Dollar Holds Ground.

The dollar about held its own against foreign exchanges, although the French franc was lifted beyond the point at which further gold imports from Paris were profitable.

Steel shares added to their week-end gains as the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated operations of the industry had risen another half a point to 28.1 per cent of capacity.

United States Steel preferred rose 2 points to 84. The common and Bethlehem Steel, American Rolling Mill, Republic Steel and National Steel were up fractionally to more than a point.

Rail stocks, as well as bonds, derived some strength from statements in RFC quarters that the Government would not press railroads for liquidation of their borrowings. But gains of rail shares generally were small. Atlantic Coast Line was up only fractionally following the declaration of a dividend of $1 on the stock.

On Gaining List.

Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, Air Reduction, Brooklyn Union Gas, Coca-Cola, Curtis Publishing preferred, Hershey Chocolate, Liggett & Myers and Spiegel-May-Stern were among issues scoring gains of 1 to 3 points.

Volume increased to 1,411,020 shares, compared with 1,130,191 Friday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks moved up for the fourth consecutive session to 75.6, up 1 point and virtually duplicating the peak of the August rally.

Brokers said there had been some liquidation by professional traders, particularly in recent industrial favorites, on the belief the market had risen into an area of greater supply. Industrial shares on the average, it was pointed out, were not from the 1934 peaks established early in February.

Foreign trade figures echoed other recent indications of a little business improvement. October exports, at $206,352,000, were the largest since April, 1921, and compared with $193,069,000 for the like month last year.

Change in Labor Policies by Administration Is Necessary to Inspire Future Planning of Business, Informal Survey Reveals.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York, Nov. 26.—No "turn to the right" on the part of the Administration will prove sufficiently reassuring to business to cause industrialists to plan ahead confidently for the future unless it involves a change in labor policies.

This is indicated clearly by an informal survey of opinion in a number of important lines of business that has just been completed here. For this reason, the critical attitude toward the decisions of the National Labor Relations Board, reflected in the most recent pronouncements of Donald R. Richberg, has proved more heartening to business leaders here than perhaps any other of the various manifestations of the "swing to the right" of recent weeks. However, Mr. Richberg advanced his views as his personal opinions, and it remains to be seen whether the Administration will be willing or able to translate the policies he outlined into action.

Business men in most of the important industries, outside of the few where the closed shop had been established previously, insist that they can not plan ahead if they are going to have further battles over union recognition, hours of work and wage scales. They contend that the present structural organization and leadership of the American labor union movement is not such as to constitute assurance that wider union recognition will bring stability and peace in industrial relations, as proved the case in some countries abroad in the past. Hence, as indicated in pronouncements of such influential and inclusive business organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers, they prefer to fight over these issues now, rather than to make concessions which merely promise more protracted and costly controversies later.

Wave of Strikes Blamed for Hampering Trade Recovery.

The wave of strikes of the past year has been recognized as one of the chief influences hampering further business recovery. These strikes have been ascribed largely to Administration policies which, business leaders contend, have provoked unnecessary labor unrest. Hence, the willingness of the Administration to adopt a less aggressive policy towards industrial relations questions is held a necessary feature of any effective "turn to the right," designed to stimulate immediate further recovery in business even at the expense of parts of the long-term reform program of the Administration.

Industrialists expect that a major battle will be precipitated in and about the halls of Congress early next year over labor issues. In the first place, a powerful effort to have enacted the thirty-four maximum work week bill, or some variant of it, is anticipated. Secondly, the passage of a new law to take the place of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which expires by limitation next June, will bring up the matter of a substitute for its Section 7(a), the famous collective bargaining provision. Organized labor has already given notice of an attempt to rewrite this provision so as to bar the company union and strength the drive for general imposition of the closed shop.

At the moment, the specific issue which is the center of the controversy over labor relations is the principle of majority representation. The National Labor Relations Board, in the Houde Engineering case, ruled that a majority of the workers in a plant may choose representatives for collective bargaining to represent all the employes. Negotiations between officials of the United States Steel Corporation and the American Federation of Labor are reported deadlocked over this same issue of majority representation. The conflict over the labor provisions in the automobile code, which tends to flare up anew every time it is renewed, also centers in part around the proportional representation plan which is included therein. The merit clause, which gives the employer broad hiring and firing powers on the basis of the quality of the work done, is found equally objectionable by the A. F. of L. in the automobile code.

Industrial Interests Oppose Majority Representation Principle.

Industrial interests have indicated clearly they have no intention of submitting to the principle of majority representation, where it is not now in effect, unless and until the courts leave them no choice. The Department of Justice has yet to take the Houde decision to the courts, but it has announced it will do so.

In the light of this background of controversy, Mr. Richberg's address before the New England Council was found especially heartening by business leaders here. He, like Secretary of Commerce Roper before him, condemned coercion of employes by unions as equally objectionable with coercion by employers in the choice of representatives for collective bargaining. More significantly, he attacked the principle of majority representation, where it involves taking an artificial voting unit and depriving the minority in that unit of actual representation. Finally, Mr. Richberg warned against further reduction in hours of work and volume of production as a cure of the problem of unemployment, regarding such measures at most as temporary palliative.

The question business men now ask widely is: Did Mr. Richberg express a viewpoint which the Administration will make its actual labor policy, or did he propose a radical revision of past Administration labor policies merely as a starting point for the negotiation of a compromise with organized labor interests? The latter have a strong case when they insist the Government has failed to enforce policies and rulings of its own administrative tribunals, such as the National Labor Relations Board.

Bonds Climb Two-Tenths to Level of 84.5

Secondary Issues Lead Advance; Sales Total $10,704,000.

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—The bond market displayed further rallying tendencies today under the leadership of secondary issues which apparently reflected the improved sentiment for stocks.

While gains ranged from 1 to 3 or more points in the speculative classifications, the activity was not pronounced. Transfers totaled $10,704,000, par value, against $11,362,000 last Friday.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate bonds advanced another two-tenths of a point, to 84.5.

U. S. Securities Dull.

United States Government securities were dull and slightly irregular. Gains of 1-32 to 4-32 of a point, however, predominated. The turnover in this section amounted to only about $940,000.

Polish government 7s rallied 3½ points, to 114½, and improvement was shown by loans of Germany and Argentina. Finnish bonds were unchanged to slightly higher, although the successful flotation of $10,000,000 of Finnish notes, the first European financing here in more than four years, was cheering to banking quarters.

Curb Market Is Irregular; Volume Rises

Utilities Hold Firm as Transfers Jump to 204,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 26 (AP).—Utilities were conspicuously firm on the curb exchange today. Aside from a few specialties, other parts of the list finished narrow. The volume of trading was the largest in some time.

A mild rally occurring in the forenoon prompted some profit taking, but the list again stiffened in the final trading as the demand for power shares assumed good proportions.

American Gas & Electric, Commonwealth Edison, Consolidated Gas & Electric of Baltimore, United Gas preferred and American Light and Traction all got up a point or more. Electric Bond & Share firmed a major fraction in a large turnover.

Ford of Canada B rose some four points in light dealings. Safety Car Heating was up 2¼. While Aluminum Co. of America, Murphy Co. and Pan American Airways gained about a point each.

Some easiness appeared in oils, with Creole and International Petroleum slipping fractionally. Leading distillery shares, including Hiram Walker and Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, were steady. Wright Hargreaves, Swift Internacionale, Lake Shore and Parker Rust Proof ended about even. Great Atlantic & Pacific dipped 2½.

Transfers approximated 204,000 shares, compared with 185,000 last Friday.

Commitments for Iron and Steel Reach Highest Point Since June

Cleveland, Nov. 26.—Iron and steel commitments have risen to the highest point since June, due mainly to larger orders from automobile manufacturers, and with general consumer stocks abnormally low producers are taking a more cheerful view of the markets, states the magazine Steel.

Steelmakers' finishing mills now are absorbing more of their raw steel production and the average of steel works operations last week advanced 1 point to 29 per cent.

Automotive requirements are expected to increase over the next several months, manufacturers just beginning to get into production on new models. Output of current models last week dropped to 13,000 from 16,000 in each of the preceding two weeks. General Motors now plans early introduction of new Chevrolets, Pontiacs and Oldsmobiles.

Henry Ford Orders.

The Ford Motor Co. has placed heavy orders for foundry equipment, including 100 molding machines, following its recent machine tool purchases. First orders against inquiries for machines to re-equip Government arsenals were placed last week and the ordnance department will take bids December 3 and 4 on 113 machine tools and heat-treating equipment. The Army Air Corps also is working up a program for rehabilitating maintenance facilities at air fields.

Shape awards last week dropped to 8,595 tons. Specifications are expected out shortly for 8,000 tons for an additional to the Library of Congress. Bids have been called on 10,326 tons of reinforcing bars for two more sections of the Los Angeles metropolitan water district project. The Navy will open bids December 4 on 3,500 tons of plates, shapes and sheets for cruisers now under construction in its yards.

The official rail price, $36.37½ per ton, has been extended to orders booked before March 1 for delivery prior to June 30. Wheeling & Lake Erie, Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania collectively will require 10,000 tons of rails for the Muskingum, Ohio, conservancy district project. Northern Pacific is in the market for 24 air-conditioned coaches. Lehigh Valley has awarded 200 gondolas.

Advances in scrap prices have spread to virtually all districts, and Steel's scrap composite is up 12 cents to $10.04, highest since the first week in August. Most of the current buying, however, is to cover dealers' contracts, and at Pittsburgh the recent flurry in consumer orders has subsided.

Stove foundries, reporting an exceptionally good season, are larger buyers of pig iron. The last two cargoes of iron ore are on their way down the lakes, bringing the total for the season to 22,250,000 tons, 650,000 tons more than last year.

Prices on practically all iron and steel products have been reaffirmed for first quarter, effective December 1. Contract prices for production tin plate for 1935 hold at $5.25, in effect since November, 1933. As no price has been filed on stock tin plate, now $4.90, there is a strong inference that this will be dropped. Heavy purchasing of stock tin plate has resulted. One large jobbing interest is reported to have covered for its first half requirements. Mill quantity extras on small lots of plates and shapes first announced in September, but suspended, will become effective December 1 for shipment after December 31.

Operations Increase Again.

Steel works operations last week increased 8 points to 46 per cent at Cleveland; 15 to 55, New England; 2 to 33 Chicago, and 4 to 35, Youngstown. All other districts were unchanged; Pittsburgh, 21; Wheeling, 54; Detroit, 48; Birmingham, 25; Buffalo, 24; eastern Pennsylvania, 20.

Steel's London correspondent cables iron and steel production in the important Middlesbrough district, England, is reaching record figures, the best since 1929. Trade throughout Great Britain is showing increased activity.

American iron and steel imports dropped to 20,202 tons in Otcober from 23,847 tons in September, and were the smallest of any month this year, except July, with 17,676 tons. For nine months imports total 261,-781 tons, compared with 354,283 tons in the first nine last year.

Steel's iron and steel composite is up 3 cents to $32.18, reflecting the rise in scrap; the finished steel composite holds at $54.

Brands Board Votes Regular 25-Cent Return

North American Company Declares Dividend on Common Stock.

New York, Nov. 28 (AP).—Directors of Standard Brands, Inc., today declared the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the common, payable January 2 to stock on record December 6.

Directors of the North American Co. today declared a dividend of 25 cents in cash on the common stock payable January 2 to stock of record December 5. In previous quarters the company paid 12½ cents in cash and 1 per cent in stock.

The change from part stock and part cash to a straight cash dividend policy, said J. F. Fogarty, president, was due to decreased requirements of subsidiaries for property additions. These are now at the rate of $12,000,000 a year, or considerably below the average for the last several years, he said.

Directors of Kentucky Utilities Co. declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the 6 per cent preferred, payable January 15 to stock of record December 29.

Leading Firms Of Brokers to Merge Jan. 1

Clark, Childs & Keech, Harriman & Co. Agree on Consolidation.

By Karl von Lewinski.

Consolidation of Harriman & Co. and the Frank B. Keech interests of the firm of Clark, Childs, and Keech & Co., two of the largest Wall street brokerage concerns, under the name of Harriman & Keech, is announced today by George A. Garrett, resident partner of Clark, Childs, Keech & Co. The consolidation will take place on January 1.

GARRETT.

Yesterday it was announced also in New York that the Clark, Childs interests would be consolidated into the firm of Shields & Co., the firm henceforth to be known as Shields & Co.

The combination of these three firms into two units is regarded as the first important concentration of market facilities since the recent wave of regrouping in brokerage firms started to effect economies in operation.

Maintain Branch Offices.

With the expansion, the firm of Harriman & Keech will be represented in this city by the two resident partners, George A. Garrett and Major Ferry K. Heath.

The firm will maintain the branch offices at the Savoy Plaza and Biltmore Hotels in New York. Both firm's offices here and in Providence, R. I., will be consolidated. The Wilmington, Delaware and Paterson (N. J.) branches of Harriman & Co. will be continued by the new firm.

In line with Mr. Garrett's main announcement, he signified that the following partners of the firm of Clark, Childs & Keech would become partners of Harriman & Keech:

Frank B. Keech, Gilbert W. Keech, William M. Erb, George A. Garrett, Lucius P. Ordway, jr., George Russhon and Austin F. Barry. Frank A. Weismann and W. Channing Burbank, associated with the present firm of Clark, Childs & Keech and former partners of the old firm of Clark, Childs & Co., will become partners of the firm as well as Harrison K. Bird, a member of the Stock Exchange, who will become a special partner.

HEATH.

Partners of the firm of Harriman & Co. who will become partners of the new firm are: Henry W. Bull, Eliot Buffington, Oliver Harriman, George F. Brennan, William G. Jones, jr., Ferry K. Heath and Campbell Weir.

One of Most Active.

The firm of Shields & Co., with the resultant larger facilities as a result of the merger, will become one of the three most active firms on the New York Stock Exchange.

It will have branches in the East, the Middle West and on the continent. In addition to its memberships on the New York Exchange it will hold seats on the Chicago Board of Trade and all other security and commodity markets.

Paul V. Shields, who organized the firm of Shields & Co., will become senior partner in the new firm. Other partners are Joseph H. Seaman, Cornelius Shields, Egbert Moxham, T. C. Rodman, Jess W. Sweetser, James P. Maher, Robert Ayers, Warner Jones, Daniel A. Lindley, Eugene Barry, V. N. Bashkiroff and Thomas H. Stonborough.

J. F. A. Clark will become a special partner of Shields & Co. Herbert H. Childs, Lewis E. Waring and George Passmore will become general partners.

Board Installations Denied.

Recent reports that additional local brokerage concerns planned installation of the new automatic stock boards were emphatically denied at a number of the offices yesterday.

G. Bowie Chipman, resident partner of Laidlaw & Co., and former local head of Harriman & Co., was emphatic in his declaration that the boards operated by boys were more favored by the customers. "Aside from the fact that the increased cost makes them nearly prohibitive in the present slow market," Mr. Chipman said, "clicking of the changes as well as lighted numbers are disliked by most of the customers."

Only 3 of the 13 largest brokerage offices in Washington carry the automatic boards at the present time.

Local Stock Trading.

Capital Transit & Electric Co. scored a new high on the Washington Stock Exchange yesterday when a two-share lot crossed the board at 29. One previous and one subsequent sale of ten shares each was registered at 28¾.

Potomac Electric Power 6 per cent preferred sold at 109, the 5½ per cent moving at 111½. Riggs National Bank common again sold at its recent high of 210. Washington Gas Light Co. sold at 62 and Peoples Drug Stores preferred at 110¾.

Potomac Consolidated 5s came out at 105 for a $1,000 lot. Capital Traction 5s sold at 91 for a $1,000 turnover and $1,000 Washington Gas 5s for 1958 moved at 99¾.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—An irregular tendency prevailed on the stock exchange yesterday. Transatlantic issues, encouraged by favorable Wall street advices, led an early advance where in rubber, industrial and gold-mining shares participated, although best prices were not maintained. Argentine and German bonds were firm, but gilt-edged securities suffered from profit taking. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Prices on the bourse showed strength yesterday following Joseph Goebbel's statement saying, "Germany has no intention of making war." Rentes and Young plan bonds advanced. The closing was firm.

Berlin—After a quiet opening, prices on the bourse developed a steadier tone, with the public participating. The market closed higher compared with last week.

Sanity Test Set On Job Threat

Court Directs Alienist Examine Henry, Held in B. & O. Case.

Baltimore, Nov. 26 (AP).—Mental tests for Walter E. Henry, former Baltimore & Ohio Railroad employe charged with threatening Daniel Willard, president of the railroad, were ordered today by Judge William C. Coleman, in United States District Court.

Judge Coleman signed an order directing that Henry be examined by Dr. Ralph. Truitt, local psychiatrist.

United States Attorney Bernard J. Flynn, who had planned to take the case before the grand jury tomorrow, said the sanity test order would prevent him from bringing up the case until later.

Henry is being held on charges, invoked under the Lindbergh kidnaping law, of extortion. He was arrested November 17, after railroad detectives had investigated a letter received by Willard, threatening his life and those of three other high-ranking B. & O. officials, unless 1,500 furloughed employes were returned to work.

Henry is being held in default of $7,500 bond.

APPLE MARY By Martha Orr

HERE I WAS WORRYING ABOUT HOW I'D INVEST THAT FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, TO MAKE ENOUGH TO TAKE DENNIE TO WESTCHESTER CLINIC, AND RIGHT OUT OF A CLEAR SKY COMES A CHANCE T'LOAN IT TO JOE, TO SAVE HIS STORE!
APPLES 5¢
WELL, JOE, I'VE DECIDED TO INVEST DENNIE'S FIVE HUNDRED IN YOUR BUSINESS.
BUT, APPLE MARY, I THOUGHT YOU WERE USING THAT FOR TREATMENTS FOR HIM!
THE DOCTOR SAID, DENNIE WOULD HAVE T' STAY IN TH' HOSPITAL FOR SEVERAL MONTHS, AND IT'LL COST A LOT MORE THAN I THOUGHT IT WOULD.
SAY, WITH THAT AMOUNT, ADDED TO WHAT I ALREADY HAVE, I CAN PAY THE NOTE, AND—
I'LL HAVE ENOUGH LEFT TO BUY THAT LARGER STORE ACROSS TH' STREET. WHY, I'LL BE ABLE TO DOUBLE YOUR INVESTMENT INSIDE OF SIX MONTHS!
WILL YOU REALLY DOUBLE MY MONEY, JOE?

Walt Mason, Himself

Happy Days.

The day is dark and gloomy, there is a threat of rain; and being old and rheumy, I murmur and complain. The glowing skies were never with crapelike vestments hung, but they were blue forever, long since, when I was young. The sun was always shining, the breeze was sweet and cool, and no one was repining, when I attended school. If rain was badly needed, it always rained by night, and so we all proceeded through days of calm delight. The road seems rough and rutty, as I pursue the trail, and, being old and nutty, I make a grievous wail. The roads, when I was younger, seemed good to moving men and I am filled with hunger to know such roads again. They were as smooth as grease is, no hummocks blocked the way; a man could take his nieces and jog along day. The roads, when I was younger, were smooth as roads could be, and merchant, clerk and monger drove gayly to the sea. The women now are catty, they go on gossip-raids; and, being old and batty, I think of old-time maids. The girls, when I was youthful, were pleasing to the eye, and they were staid and truthful and elegant and shy. They told no vicious stories, such as the modern tells, that might obscure the glories of other damozels. In fact all things were better, long since, when I was young; the sea, methinks, was wetter, the moon was higher hung.

Discussion Set On Telephone Rate Schedule

Utility Board, Company and People's Counsel to Seek New Rate.

A new telephone rate schedule is to be considered at a conference between Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. representatives, the Public Utilities Commission and William A. Roberts, people's counsel, at 2:30 p. m. today.

The conference was sought by the company. It will revolve about the commission order that rates be reduced 10 per cent and excess charges collected by the company be returned to telephone users either in cash or as credit on their bills. The impounded fund now amounts to $1,000,000.

Negotiations have been under way for some time looking to a new rate schedule which will be satisfactory to the commission as conforming to its order. A schedule proposed recently by the company was rejected by the commission last week. Riley E. Elgen, commission chairman, said the proposed schedule was "too promotional."

Enforcement of the commission order to cut telephone bills 10 per cent has been held up since October, 1932, while the company sought to have the courts overrule the commission. The District Supreme Court has upheld the commission and the matter now is pending in the District Court of Appeals.

Owen Place Home Looted.

Thieves who broke the lock on a basement garage door, entering the house from the cellar, stole three pistols, a $100 ring, a $35 ring, a $10 ring, a $20 pair of rhinestone bracelets and a pair of shoes, Thomas H. Dennis, 1118 Owen place northeast, reported to the police last night.

Women Asked To Give Views Upon Reforms

Prettyman Outlines Nine Points on Legislation to Be Given to Congress.

Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman yesterday asked the District Federation of Women's Clubs for its views on a program of legislation to better governmental procedure in Washington.

Prettyman, who spoke at a meeting held at the Young Women's Christian Association, outlined nine points which are now under consideration in bills being drafted for Congress.

Briefly, these bills cover the following points: Clarification of the powers of the District Commissioners, elimination of delay and strengthening of decisions of the Public Utilities Commissions by limiting appeals to the courts to points of law establishment of a lunacy board to advise the courts with the present lunacy jury system optional.

The establishment of new regulations governing the small loan business, reintroduction of the taxicab insurance bill, elimination of present difficulties in liquor control, the sale of half the present municipal center property and the erection of the much needed court's building and regulation of selection of District delegates to the national political conventions.

Paul E. Lesh, local attorney, spoke on suffrage for the District. Declaring it was not the intention of the founders of the Constitution to deprive District citizens from a vote in their local affairs, he added that if there exists here a generation which does not want to vote, that generation has been done a definite harm.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the federation, presided. The program was arranged by and given under the direction of Mrs. Horace S. Phelps, chairman of the department of legislation.

Post Lecture On Bermuda

Playground of Atlantic to Be Shown in Talk and Pictures.

James N. Findlay, former liner captain, well known traveler and cruise director, tonight will take hundreds of Washingtonians on a trip, in fancy, to Bermuda, the treasure island of the Atlantic and playground of two continents, as he delivers the sixth of the 1934-35 series of Washington Post Travel Lectures. The lecture, which will begin at 8:15 p. m., will be held at the Masonic Auditorium, Thirteenth street and New York avenue.

Capt. Findlay, who has lived in Bermuda for years, knows the island thoroughly, and his description will be extremely interesting. Much of the past history will be told, and colored slides will enable members of the audience to actually see hundreds of scenes. Included in these scenes are views of the coral beds and marine gardens for which the harbors of the island are famous.

Tickets for this lecture, and for all future lectures in The Post series, may be purchased at the business office of The Post, or at the auditorium box office on the evening of the lecture. Doors will be opened at 7 p. m., and the lecture will begin promptly at 8:15 p. m.
